HER TRUST

By Mrs. E. H. Hough.

"Olive!"

"Yes, father?"

She turned from the window, where she had been watching the gambols of a laughing girl of seventeen with a large mastiff, and came toward her father, a handsome, queenly woman, and one upon whom, albeit the first bloom of youth was past, the eye could not but rest with admiration, reverence and regard for all that was sweet and winning in woman.

"Wade Hampton is coming here tomorrow, Olive."

"Yes, father."

Her voice took an upward turn, for the name conveyed no information, and she was surprised and stirred by an unwonted agitation in her father's face and tone.

She had been wont to study every line and changing expression of that dear face since her mother died ten years before, and left her not only to be her father's stay and comfort, but the guardian of her sister, a tiny little fairy of seven summers; and unwearied devotion to both had thus far taken the place of all other loves or desires or ambitions. The quiet, peaceful life, with its little round of uneventful duties, suited her tranquil nature well, and thus far she had been blissfully content.

"His father was my chosen friend at college—but he married the girl I loved—and for years I harbored a bitter resentment against him," went on her father presently. "Until I met your mother, and in her gentle, peaceful sphere my turbulent spirit found rest and comfort. But not until I had in turn done my old-time friend a grievous wrong, by suspecting him of some dishonest act, of which he was not only innocent but entirely ignorant, and not only that, but imparting my suspicions to others. When I discovered my error I made all the restitution in my power; but the effect was never entirely shorn of its damaging results. Three years ago he died, leaving nothing to his only son but the good name which I had so nearly destroyed. His wife followed him within a year. I learned this quite by accident, and feeling as if I had a duty to perform to the boy, I have offered him a position in my business, and if he proves worthy I will eventually give him an interest, and secure him at least a competency. He is to be my guest here for a few weeks, and if I find him worthy, I would not refuse to cement the friendship and reconciliation still closer, by receiving him into my family as a son. But I must prove him, first, and I give you a trust, Olive, over Elsie—you know how thoughtless, how impulsive she is—that nothing passes between them by which her happiness might be jeopardized, until I am convinced that he is one with whom I could safely trust her. You will no this, Olive?"

Elsie's gay, happy laugh came ringing in through the open window, as if to add a deeper earnestness to her father's plea; and with the gentle, half-melancholy smile, so like her mother's, parting her lips, Olive answered quietly but no less earnestly:

"Yes, father, she has been my charge and trust for years—she shall be a doubly precious, two-fold sacred trust now that her young heart may be in the balance."

"My dear, devoted girl—my faithful Olive!" her father exclaimed, clasping her fondly in his arms. "With you I can trust her welfare as fully to the most devoted and tender mother—as you have indeed been to her these ten years."

And, indeed, she did seem to him more like a second mother to his motherless child than her own sister—herself still in early womanhood—only three-and-twenty, and it had never occurred to him any likelihood of her ever having any thoughts save those that centered in her home and immediate family. Nor did anything come to Olive's peaceful heart to gainsay or contradict him.

But that was before Wade Hampton came.

They were gathering flowers to decorate his room—Elsie entering with the gleeful eagerness of a child into the novel prospect of having a visitor for several weeks, when a firm step on the pathway sounded near them, and, glancing up, their eyes met simultaneously.

Elsie's eyes dilated with the frank welcome of the child that she was, while Olive's fell before the deep, earnest gaze, and a warm color suffused her fair cheek and throat.

"Pardon me, ladies, for my unceremonious appearance," he said, doffing his hat, and revealing a well-shaped head, with close-cut, curling hair. "I rang the bell, but there was no answer, and attracted by the luxuriance of the garden I wandered over here not knowing what better to do."

"Very well done, indeed, since you can help us carry these to the house," retorted Elsie, with ready camaraderie, as she piled his arms with the fragrant blooms. "I suppose, of course, you are Wade Hampton?"

"Of course," he echoed, smiling at her naivete.

"Oh, well, then, we are only Olive and Elsie, so there's no need of any formal introduction," she continued. "I suppose papa is taking his afternoon nap, and Kitty is down in the vegetable garden helping Thomas make a selection for dinner, and of course taking twice as long over it as either could do it alone. But I'll do the honors for once and show you to your room. You must be tired."

She led the way with a pretty little gesture of command, Wade following, while Olive brought up in the rear, with her usual ready courtesy and welcome of an expected guest all gone, and in its place this strange sensation that sealed her lips and made all around seem different—unnatural—not like the world in which she had moved half an hour ago.

It was only too evident what the end must be for Elsie—it was a clear case of mutual affinity—they had come to each other as naturally as the birds mate; she could only hope that her father might have no objection to interpose, could only resolve that every effort of her own might be directed to securing to her sister the fulfillment of that happiness without which her life must be dark forever.

"My trust is superceded—made void—by the first glance into each other's eyes," she murmured, when she could at last gain command of herself. "I can only trust that it has been resigned into worthy hands—can only now help my father to see it also."

But ere the week was out, Olive had read the secret of that strange spell that had possessed her, and knew that her trust had assumed a phase more sacred, more pitilessly unsparing in its demands, which required of her to stifle the first sweet joy her life had ever known—the joy, the bliss that is like nothing this life can ever equal—that comes to a woman's heart with the first conscious dawn of love; the first realization that another—although, perchance, he may not realize it—has awakened that voice in her soul that must echo there while life shall last.

But with her, Olive realized it could never be anything but an echo—never the full, living tone of acknowledged and mutual love.

Her father's liking for and instinctive confidence in his guest, was apparent at once; and it needed no skillful eye to read the happy understanding that had established itself from the first between Elsie and their guest. When his eye rested on her, Olive read the affectionate regard of a brother; when it turned upon Elsie, it held but one interpretation—that which her aching heart acknowledged as the requiem of all her joy.

"He—they must never know!" she said when she had fought down the first sharp, bitter protest that seemed more than she could cope with. "Her life has been meant for sunshine—mine for sacrifice. This is my trust—that the love that has crowned her life shall know no hint of shade—that my best gift to her—the gift of a heart that I know to be worthy—that because of my hopeless love for it, is twice bestowed, shall be hers to have and hold through life, with no thought of another's hopeless yearning to mar one thought of her perfect joy."

And well she kept her word and fulfilled her trust, watching with a depth of heroic sacrifice of which no one dreamed, the unfolding of those two hearts—never faltering but once, and that when once coming upon them unseen, she heard Elsie say in her artless manner:

"Dear Olive always wished the best of life for me, and always tried to give it to me—and now she will have her wish right royally fulfilled—for nothing that she ever wished for me can give me the supreme happiness of what I shall soon tell her—as soon as papa says yes. Dear girl! how it will surprise her!"

"Innocent child!" murmured Olive, hurrying away, unable to endure another word. "Do you not know that your guileless secret is only too apparent? Oh, Heaven! give me strength, courage, fortitude to hear as she would wish me to hear the news of her supreme happiness."

But the days passed into weeks, and the disclosure she both longed for and dreaded did not come.

And then Wade went away, to be gone on an important matter of business for his friend.

With loving solicitude Olive watched Elsie while he was absent, but beyond a fond, thoughtful look that she would at times detect bent upon herself, Elsie betrayed no change, although as the time for his return drew near there was a restlessness almost amounting to apprehension in her manner that made Olive long to take her in her arms and comfort her; but she had not been made the repository of the precious secret, and until then she shrunk from even mentioning Wade's name as in any way connected with Elsie's eager anticipation.

She was out when he returned. Returning she passed around the corner of the house, and from the open window of the room where she had watched her sister's gambols on that last day of happy girlhood for either of them, she heard her father's voice.

"You have done well and faithfully, Wade! You have proven worthy of my fullest regard and confidence. And now I will reward you with the most precious gift it is in my power to bestow. Go find my daughter, and if you have won or can win her heart, take it with my blessing!"

Then Olive's agony reached its climax, and staggering away, she scarce knew where, she wandered down to the flower garden where she had stood on that day when her heart awoke.

As she stood there she heard eager footsteps approaching—Elsie and Wade.

Involuntarily she put out one hand as if to ward them off—but Elsie caught it and pressed it to her lips.

"Dear Olive—darling sister," she exclaimed, in a transport of joy. "Oh, what happiness I have to bring you! but no, you tell her, Wade, I have no right even to see it now, and in an instant she was off like a bird, while Wade caught Olive's swaying form in his arms.

"Olive, darling," he exclaimed tenderly, "I have your father's sanction to win his daughter. Have I yours also?"

White to the lips she raised her head:

"Yes, Wade—and my blessing to his," she gasped, huskily. "Go and seek her."

"Nay, if I must seek her, then I have not found her, for she is here!" exclaimed Wade, his eyes meeting hers with a look no one could misunderstaind. But she could not accept it yet.

"Here?" she faltered. "I thought you—"

"Loved Elsie? So I do as a dear sister, and her love for me is the same. But you, Olive, my peerless one, you are my heart's own, and I have dared to hope I read your secret—the loving sacrifice you would have made of your own happiness for another. This is your trust, Olive—the keeping of my heart, my home, my honor through life. Will you have it, Olive?"

And lifting to his a face beautified with love, joy and rapture, Olive murmured with deep emotion:

"I accept the trust!"

WATERWAYS OF ARIZONA.

Marvels of Engineering Skill Cut Out of Many Feet of Solid Rock.

The largest and likewise the best preserved of the waterways was taken out of the Salt river on the south side, near the mouth of the Verde, and, as described by the Californian, is a marvel of engineering skill. For three and one-half miles it passes through an artificial gorge in the Superstition mountains, cut out of the solid rock to the depth of 100 feet. After the mountains are passed it divides into four branches, the longest of which measures more than forty miles, while all four aggregate a length of 120 miles, independent of the smaller ditches by which water was distributed over the soil. Except in rare instances these smaller ditches have been filled, and in that portion of the desert are obscured by the sandstorms that prevail; but the larger one is perfectly distinct, and measures sixty-four feet in width with an average depth of twelve feet. Through this way the water for the support of the cities between the Salt and Gila rivers was conveyed, and 1,600 square miles of country, now destitute of all vegetation except the Sahuara and an occasional palo verde, was irrigated by it. This canal reached to within a short distance of the Gila river, and the water was taken from the river Salt for the apparent reason that at this point the north bank of the Gila was so high that they were unable to reach the current with a canal, and they evidently knew of no way to raise the water to the level of the surrounding country. This part of the desert is covered with ruins, and must have at one time been the residence of a teeming population.

UNDER FIRE.

Mental Impressions of the Soldiers When Bullets Fly About.

I was wandering on foot through a wood trying to see how the battle was going. There was a continuous firing to the left and the hiss of bullets over our heads. Abruptly the Confederates opened on us from an adjoining battery with grape and cannister. The shot rattled all around us, cutting down the bare twigs and boughs above and plowing up the ground in our immediate vicinity. It was so abrupt and the source so invisible that I was fairly startled at first, but I was exhilarated also. It seemed like real war. The sensation was genuine and not unpleasurable, because, perhaps, I saw nobody struck.

It makes a deal of difference with one's feelings, under fire, when one is an eye-witness of casualties in the immediate neighborhood. The sense of danger is greatly increased as well as the likelihood of death, if men are falling around one—if somebody at one's side receives a ghastly or mortal wound. Wounds and death in the concrete appear very different from what they do in abstract. Time and experience are needed not to be deeply moved by the inevitable horrors of war. Usage makes us to a certain extent callous to our surroundings, however painful. In battle every soldier is under obligation to be firm, to obey orders, to be faithful to his cause. If he falters or flies he is disgraced, punished, irrevocably ruined. On the other hand, if he does what he should do, he is esteemed, honored, promoted. As a martyr of policy, of self-interest, therefore, is it not strange that any soldier should shirk or flinch under any circumstances? A soldier in his first engagement is inclined to a presentiment of death and is often surprised when it is over to find that he is still alive. In his twentieth or tenth engagement his presentiments have disappeared with his nervousness and he is cool in the presence of peril.

What is known as courage is, ninety-nine case out of a hundred, a matter of discipline. A man is alarmed at danger in the beginning, not so much because he is timid as because danger is new to him. The trite proverb that familiarity breeds contempt is measurably true in war. The coward of today may be the hero of to-morrow. The nerves that tremble at the outset may be strong as steels at the termination. Everything comes by education, intrepidity included. Raw troops are always untrustworthy, simply because of their rawness. The same troops as veterans do not blanch in the face of death. It may be hard to count on a man's courage, but it would be madness to count on his cowardice. Almost any human being will be fearless with certain provocations, from certain motives. Much depends on the cause and his attachment to it. He may be craven in one thing and dauntless in another. Men feel very differently under fire at first, but much alike at last. They can all be made to endure becomingly, creditably, after repeated trials. The incurable coward is almost as exceptionable as the congenital idiot.—Junius Henri Brown in Worthington's

"A RESPECTABLE NUMBER."

One of Pennsylvania's Highest Courts Gives Legal Status to the Phrase.

"Everybody has at some time used or heard used the rather indefinite expression of 'a respectable number,' as applied to some gathering or collection of people," said a Philadelphia lawyer to a New York Sun man, "but I guess there are not many who know that a profound judicial decision in one of the highest courts of Pennsylvania has fixed a precedent as to what may be legally considered a respectable number. The result of a lawsuit that involved the disposal of a good many thousands of dollars depended on the question of what constituted a respectable number. Charles McAlister, a very wealthy Philadelphian, who had a country seat at the fashionable suburb, Torresdale, died in 1881. The Fidelity Trust company was the executor of his estate under his will. Mr. McAlister was a devout Presbyterian and he bequeathed a valuable piece of ground at Torresdale, $5,000 toward building a Presbyterian church upon it, and $5,000 a year for the income of a pastor to preach in the church; the provisions of the will to be carried out by the trust company as his executor, whenever a respectable number of persons should get together to form the nucleus of a congregation. Seventeen persons got together as this nucleus and called upon the trust company to pay over the money and execute its trust. The trust company refused to hand over the money or take any action in the matter, on the ground that seventeen persons were not a respectable number within the meaning of the will. Suit was brought against the company as executor of the McAlister estate and it was tried before Judge Allison, one of the most learned judges of the state. He decided that seventeen was legally a respectable number, and ordered the trust company to carry out the provisions of the will in the matter of the Torresdale church and the annual payment of $5,000 for the pastor. Whether any less than seventeen would have been a respectable number the opinion did not decide.

Alexander Dumas, the father, loved his little joke, and was fond of having it at the expense of his son, who had not so keen a sense of humor.

At one time the father visited the son, and was invited into the garden which was but little larger than a pocket handkerchief. There they sat under the one little tree, and fanned themselves.

"I am suffocating," said the elder at length.

"What shall I do, father?" asked Alexander.

"Open your chamber window," said the father, mischievously, "and let a little air out into your garden."

FOR "SHOVING THE QUEER"

THREE MEN ARE ARRESTED IN SIOUX CITY.

One Breaks Down and Confesses That He and His Companions Have Made and Circulated the Spurious Coins.

Captured Counterfeiters.

Sioux City, Iowa, Special, May 15.—Within the last three weeks a large number of counterfeit silver coins have been placed in circulation here, but until last night all efforts of the police to locate the people who passed them were unavailing. Detective Krieg shadowed three men into a saloon, suspecting them of crookedness. They paid for drinks with a bogus half-dollar, which the bartender refused. The detective at once arrested them, but one escaped. The others gave their names as George Hallette and John Mason. Hallette is a carpenter and Mason a cook, and both have been active members of the Salvation army. At the police station Hallette broke down and confessed that they had made the money themselves. They had in their possession bogus dollars, half-dollars and quarters, which they had tried to throw away on the way to the station. Hallette took the officers to a hollow tree a mile out of the city, near the river, and showed them part of the counterfeiting outfit. Then he took them back to the city, and in a house on Lafayette street they found the dies and other articles. The outfit was a very complete one and the dies perfect. It was learned from the woman who owns the house that they have been making money by the wholesale for a month, working every night. Their coins are very hard to detect. Hallette said they had learned the business from one Moriarity at Council Bluffs, who is now under arrest for counterfeiting. Several hundred dollars' worth of counterfeits have been put in circulation here. Hallette and Mason will be given up to the United States authorities.

Collision of Ships.

London, May 15.—The captain of the steamship City of Hamburg, which arrived at Swansea to-day from Hamburg, reports that 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon his vessel collided in a fog off Trevose Head, coast of Cornwall, with the ship Countess Evelyn, bound with passengers and iron ore from Bilbao, Spain, to Newport, Wales. The captain of the Countess Evelyn jumped aboard the City of Hamburg and Mate Richards crawled to her through a hole in the Countess Evelyn's quarter. Ninety seconds later the Countess Evelyn went under with her crew of sixteen and nine passengers. Boats were lowered at once from the City of Hamburg, but the search in the fog proved almost useless. Seaman Jarbin was picked up, but he died a few minutes after having been brought aboard the steamship. The dead body of a little girl was also found. Otherwise the attempt at rescue was resultless. The lost passengers were the English wife and the son and daughter of a Spanish gentleman in Bilbao, Mrs. Williams, her son and infant daughter, two men named Barton and a Londoner whose name has not been ascertained.

The steamship Ataka, which arrived at Cardiff to-day, was damaged yesterday in a collision with an unknown ship off Lundy isle. The Ataka's captain thinks that the other vessel went down with all on board.

Bennett and the Herald.

Chicago, May 15.—The report telegraphed from New York last night that James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald, has been compelled to relinquish in a measure the control of that paper and the intimation that the Mackey interest had profited by the alleged change, prove to have been entirely without foundation. The only excuse for the rumor was a forced construction placed upon several unimportant circumstances, namely, a change in the wording of the headlines of the paper relating to the proprietorship and a recent visit of Mr. Bennett to this country.

This was made the basis of the assertion that Mr. Bennett's interests had become impaired through losses in the Mackay-Bennett cable and the London and Paris editions of the Herald, and that he had been compelled to dispose of part of the Herald property. It may be stated on the authority of an officer of the United Press, who has an intimate acquaintance of long standing in New York newspaper circles, that no such transactions have taken place and that there has been no change in the control of the New York Herald since it passed from the elder Mr. Bennett into the hands of the present management.

Hill Talks to Engineers.

Schenectaday, N. Y., May 15.—This town was full of railroad engineers today who were here in attendance upon the union meeting of the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, which was held in the Van Curter opera house. Senator David B. Hill made an address which was a clearly defined expression of his views on labor organizations in general and the brotherhood in particular. Grand Chief Arthur also spoke. It was the policy of the brotherhood, he said, in case of strikes, to use the best methods for adjustment of the difficulties, and in almost every case in which the order had been interested matters in dispute had been amicably adjusted.

Distilleries to Close.

Peoria, Ill., May 15.—It is said the order to shut down the distilleries will take effect as soon as practicable. Already one distillery in Pekin has closed, and the Woolner Bros.' house in this city will cease running this week. It is expected that all will be closed by the first of June. The order does not alone apply to this city, but to the trust houses throughout the country. Thousands of barrels of spirits are stored in bonded warehouses, and President Greenhut says the company desires to dispose of the surplus before any more is manufactured.

Death of a Bishop.

Burlington, Vt., May 15.—Bishop W. H. A. Bissell, of the Episcopal diocese (Vermont), died to-day. He had rallied from the well nigh fatal attack of last December, but unfavorable symptoms set in last Friday.

Miss Anthony Happy.

Chicago, May 15.—"The woman's congress next week will be one of the most notable ever held by women since the world began," said Miss Susan B. Anthony at the Palmer house to-day. "She has secured recognition and gained reputation for her sex. I have looked forward to this occasion with a great deal of pleasure."

Disbanded.

Denver, May 15.—The Jack McAuliffe Theatrical company disbanded here to-day. The reason given is that it would not be profitable to complete the season which would have ended at San Francisco. Mr. McAuliffe and the members of his company will leave for the East shortly.

APPARENTLY IMPRESSIONABLE.

She Jeopardises Her Interests.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Special, May 15.—Some time ago a young woman named Elise Eisele, residing at Breckenridge, brought suit in the United States district court for $20,000 against the Northern Pacific road. She set up in her complaint that while coming from Minneapolis to Breckenridge on a Northern Pacific train a brakeman named Frank Murray attempted to assault her and forced her to submit to many indignities. Ezra G. Valentine was her attorney, and it is claimed the road offered to settle with her for $2,000, which was refused.

In the meantime the grand jury of Wilkin county indicted Murray for criminal assault. For sometime back Elise has been employed as waitress in the Hyser house at Breckenridge. There was also a cook there named Frank Smith, who was accompanied by a woman purporting to be his wife. About ten days ago Smith and Elise suddenly disappeared and the woman purporting to be Smith's wife was left behind. A great deal of sympathy was expressed for her until it was ascertained that she was not married to Smith, but was simply living with him. Smith and Miss Eisele were married at Wadena and are now living at Park Rapids. The affair created quite a sensation, and it was at first claimed that Smith was a detective hired by the road to get Miss Eisele away or to compromise her so as to injure her chances of winning the case against the road. This version of the case is now abandoned, as it is quite apparent that Elise was simply struck on Smith and married him in an injudicious manner. Her conduct has naturally injured her chances of winning her case against the road and lessens the chances of convicting young Murray, who has the reputation of being a very decent fellow.

Shutting Out Idiots.

Washington, May 15.—Supt. Hermann Stumpf, with the approbation of Secretary Carlisle, has made a new and important ruling, overturning former practices as to the admission of idiot immigrants, when accompanied by their parents into the United States. He holds that it was that intention of the act to make each class of debarred immigrants separate and distinct. It debars an idiot absolutely, and the fact that the idiot might have a private fortune, or relations amply able to provide for his wants, cannot be taken into consideration any more than it might be taken into consideration in an application to take a person suffering from a loathsome or dangerous contagious disease. The department regrets that it has become an imperative necessity to enforce the law in order to secure the benefit of its humane provisions to some who might otherwise be induced to embark on a fruitless voyage.

Fatal Explosion.

Reading, Pa., May 15.—Two persons were killed and several seriously injured by the explosion of a locomotive on the Lebanon Valley branch of the Philadelphia & Reading railroad at Lebanon to-day. The killed are: Levi Yocum, engineer, of this city; John Yocum of Lebanon, aged fourteen, a nephew of the engineer, who had got on the engine to see his uncle. Injured: George Sallada, conductor, Reading, fatally; Grant Seller, a boy of Lebanon, who was riding on the engine, seriously hurt; William Anspach, crossing watchman, fatally injured; the latter's daughter Annie, aged sixteen, was also seriously and perhaps fatally injured; Isaac Beard of this city, front brakeman, severely injured. Several persons living a square away were injured. The locomotive is a complete wreck. Several of the victims were blown half a square away.

Mrs. Holbrook Wins.

Fergus Falls, Minn., Special, May 15.—The jurors declare Mrs. Holbrook an innocent woman. It took twenty-four hours to arrive at this conclusion, but it was finally reached after one of the stormiest times ever occurring in a jury room. The first ballot stood nine in favor of Mrs. Holbrook's innocence. The other three jurors were firm in their convictions that she was guilty, and held to this opinion for twenty-four hours. At last they yielded, and a verdict of not guilty was returned. There was no absolute proof that Mrs. Holbrook had been unfaithful, and the jury did not feel justified in finding a verdict of gulty simply upon circumstantial evidence.

No News From Nicaragua.

Washington, May 15.—Secretary Gresham said to-day that he had not received any information from Nicaragua to-day. It is believed at the state department that the news wired from San Juan Del Sur by Consul Newall, telling of the practical overthrow of the Nicaraguan government, is correct, notwithstanding the information which Dr. Guzman, the minister from Nicaragua, has received that there has been no fighting and that the government troops are well equipped and in large numbers.

Close in Little Rhody.

Providence, R. I., May 15.—The Republicans elected a senator in North Smithfield yesterday, which gives them, with the lieutenant governor, fifty-five votes in the next general assembly. This constitutes a majority in the grand committee and enables them to elect Republican state officers unless further complications arise by the unseating of Republicans by the Democratic house. If Republicans are unseated the senate will refuse to meet the house, and a hold-over government will be the result.

Keene Pays Off Old Scores.

New York, May 15.—It is alleged as a bit of inside history of the big crash in National Cordage that James R. Keene is $1,500,000 winner. Private information, it is said, conveyed through a trio of brokers' wives, enabled Keene to pay off some old scores and at the same time make a fortune. The ex-Californian is said to have been the mysterious bear in the great crash of this industrial stock.

Music for Ireland.

New York, May 15.—The Irish Independent Parliament Fund association gave a concert this evening at the Academy of Music to secure funds to aid the section of the Irish parliamentary party led by John E. Redmond. The academy was filled from floor to ceiling, and the boxes were occupied by a number of conspicuous Irish-Americans. The receipts and subscriptions, it is said, amounted to more than $10,000.

Presidents Arbitrate.

Chicago, May 15.—The conference between Presidents Reinhart, of the Atchison, and Jeffrey, of the Denver & Rio Grande, was still on to-day, but will probably be concluded Monday. Nothing but a peaceable outcome is looked for at the present time. A general meeting of lines interested will be called as soon as matters between Presidents Reinhart and Jeffrey have been settled, and the rates from trans-Missouri territory will be taken up.

The Ground Settles.

Negaunee, Mich., Special, May 15.—Ground over the upper working of the Prince of Wales mine owned by the Schlesinger company began caving Friday, and is still settling. The upper levels are partly filled or rendered so dangerous the greater part of the mining force is laid off. The management anticipates getting the trouble remedied in a few days. The damage cannot be stated until the injured portions of the mine are examined.

The Plankinton All Right.

Milwaukee, May 15.—The fact that the Plankinton bank had loaned $219,000 to the firm of Frank A. Lappen & Co., which became known Friday by the attachment proceedings begun by the bank, had a decidedly panicky effect on the smaller depositors. As soon as the doors opened to-day there was a long line of men and women in front of the teller's window and that officer kept his post steadily until 4 o'clock this afternoon, meeting every demand.

Work of Burglars.

Lakota, N. D., Special, May 15.—Burglars attempted to blow open the safe of T. J. Baird last night. No clue.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Double Tragedy at Lake Park.

Minneapolis, Minn., Special, May 15.—A double tragedy took place at St. Louis Park last night in which Hans Olson, an employe of the thresher company, killed his sister-in-law, a Miss Celia Peterson, and then put an end to his own existence. Olson, who has been on a spree for two weeks, has been threatening vengeance on his wife, and last night as she came home from church, accompanied by her sisters, Celia and Mary Peterson, Olson approached them with a gun in his hand and engaged in an altercation. He raised the revolver and fired at his wife without hitting her. Thereupon Celia Peterson rushed between them, crying, "Devil, don't shoot her." Olson thereupon turned the pistol upon the girl and put a shot into her breast, following it up with a bullet in the head. The girl fell back upon the steps and died almost instantly.

The noise of the shooting and screams of the women brought a crowd and Olson fled to the woods to the right of the house, where a great crowd followed him. He brandished the weapon with which he committed the murder, threatening to shoot any one who approached him. The crowd seeming ready to break in upon him, Olson turned the pistol upon himself and with a bullet behind the ear gave himself a fatal wound. Olson was about thirty years of age.

Curtis Must Vacate.

Washington, May 15.—A cabinet officer's resignation would cause no more flurry than that of William E. Curtis, the chief of the bureau of the American republics. It has been asserted that Mr. Curtis was a fixture, and as he had many Democratic friends in congress there was little idea that he would be disturbed. However, he had some Democratic enemies also, who set out for his scalp March 5. They say they have it hanging at their belts. Curtis is at present in Chicago on world's fair business. Friday Gresham telegraphed that his resignation as chief of the Latin-American bureau would be acceptable, and it is stated that a prompt reply was received saying that the resignation would reach the department by the first mail. Curtis became secretary of the South American commission under President Arthur, when Judge Gresham was a member of the latter's cabinet, and the judge was one of the friends who got the appointment for him. It was supposed that, as a member of a Democratic cabinet, he might retain his interest in Curtis, but the latter's removal was demanded by Secretary Carlisle on political grounds, and presumably Secretary Gresham did not care to oppose it. Mr. Curtis is in charge of the Latin-American exhibit at the fair. Since the bureau of American republics was established a good deal has been done in the way of establishing reciprocal commercial relations with the Latin republics. The policy of the Cleveland administraion is to tear these reciprocity agreements to pieces, and naturally some one will be wanted who will be in full sympathy with the administration.

Nicaragua's Rebellion.

Panama, May 15.—Advices from Nicaragua show that the revolutionists are gaining ground and are daily becoming more aggressive. San Juan Del Sur and the country towns up to Granada are in their hands. Corinto is being fortified by the government to resist the expected attack from San Juan. The opposing forces are massing at Masaya. Two battles fought near Masaya have resulted in favor of the revolutionists, whose superior artillery caused the government troops heavy losses.

Ex-President Zavalla of Nicaragua telegraphs from Granada to-day: "Almost all the country has risen against the government. The departments of Granada, Masaya, Rivas, Chontales, Matalpa, New Seova and Lake Nicaragua have risen. San Juan and the Atlantic coast are in the possession of the revolutionists. President Sacaza has been reduced to the capital. He is drawin his resources of men and money from the departments of Leon and Chinandea. The revolutionary army is camped at Masaya. Three formidable attacks by the government troops have been reported with great loss to the assailants. The government is on the defensive. The revolution advances daily, and its triumph is certain."

Robbed at the Fair.

Chicago, May 15.—The Herald says that had any one predicted that it would cost a man $4,100 in one day to see the world's fair he would have been told that he was out of his senses, and that not even if he had a meal at all the restaurants, took a ride in every one of the wheel chairs and gazed on every aggregation of oddities that was collected in Midway plaisance that he could leave behind him such a sum. Yet $4,100 was what it cost N. B. Martans at the exposition yesterday. Mr. Martans is a gentleman of seventy years of age, and hails from Woodland, Cal. He had a farm there, but, his wife and child having died, he concluded to sell his property and take a trip to his old home, Coblentz, in Germany, the place of his birth. He carried out the idea of selling the farm, received $4,100 for it, and commenced his journey to Germany. He arrived at Chicago on Friday and took rooms at the Grand Central hotel, Canal and Madison streets. Yesterday he started for the fair, carrying all his wealth in a pocketbook in the inside pocket of his overcoat.

Raids by Cuban Revolutionists.

Key West, Fla., May 14.—The Mascotte arrived to-night. She brings news of raids in the Province of Havana last night by revolutionists, notwithstanding the report of the Spanish authorities that everything is quiet. The federal officials here have reliable information that there are large quantities of arms and ammunition stored on this island destined for the Cuban insurgents. Every precaution will be taken to prevent the shipment. Gen. Marti, it is said, has collected $15,000 since last Monday in this city for the Cuban cause.

Disarmament.

Rome, May 15. — The Osservatore Romano published yesterday a long leader under the caption "Disarmament." The article is especially noticeable for its avoidance of any denial of the recent reports that the pope will invite the European great powers to disarm. The writer said that the pope alone is competent to initiate a movement towards the general reduction of the great modern armies.

Wyman Will Assign.

New York, May 15.—Erastus Wiman will file a general assignment for the benefit of his creditors on Monday or Tuesday. The assignee will be David Bennett King, the same attorney to whom Mr. Wiman transferred his real estate on Staten island in the latter part of March, for the benefit of his creditors. Mr. Wiman says he cannot estimate his assets or liabilities. If well managed he is sure he can pay dollar for dollar.

For Heat and Ventilation.

Washington, Special, May 15.—The contract for the steam heating and ventilating apparatus for the Duluth public building has been awarded to Allen Black & Co. of Duluth at $12,475, to be completed within sixty days.

A rumpus is on in the postmaster general's department because some confidential communications giving grounds of objection to some candidate for a postoffice have been given out to the press. There should be no such a thing as a confidential communication covering charges. The man affected has a right to know, so he may meet them; and the man who would make them ought to be man enough to make them openly and not slink behind a "confidential communication."—Globe,

Chicago May 12.—The Worlds fair gates will be opened to the public and the vexed qustion of Sunday opening is settled. Early last Sunday morning crowds began to move on Jackson Park, thinking that perhaps the gates of the fair grounds would be opened; but they were disappointed, and fully 40.000 people were turned away from the gates of the fair proper and spend their money with the side-shows surrounding the fair a fact which the fair authorities were not slow to grasp. As a result, at the regular monthly meeting of the local directors of the world's fair it was decided to open the gates of Jackson Park to the public for one-half the sum of admittance to the fair during the week, viz.,25 cents, This action has nothing to do with the opning of the buildings. The latter will remain closed, as required under the laws passed by congress and as agreed to when $2,500,000 was acepted from the hands of the Fifty-second congress The gatekeepers will admit to the grounds every one paying 25 cents. They can examine the buildings—on the outside—see everything there is to be seen in fact, but they cannot enter the buildings. The action of the board will go into effect a week from next Sunday or the 21st of this month. The vote by which the resolution was 27 to 7.—Crookston Times.

It is expected today that successors of all officials named will be appointed tomorrow and investigation into alleged pine land frauds in northern Minnesota will at once be proceeded with.—Crookston Times.

The prosperity of any city depends upon its own citizens. No matter how well located or what its natural advantages it must have the united and energetic support of its own people or it will not prosper, Natural advantages don't develop themselves. Neither can one or two men make a prosperous city. It requires the assistance of all. In the first place, every citizen must have faith in the future of his own town. Nothing drives away new comers more surely or discourages new enterprise more completely than to have the old time residents predicting failure. Be patriotic Believe that your city is the best city on earth and you will make others agree with you. Then remember that the best kind of patriotism stands by home institutions. He had taken her to the opera, to the theater, to dances, concerts and receptions, but never alone.

She had always included in her acceptance of his numerous invitations the prim proviso that she should be allowed to bring a chaperon, for she "never went anywhere without one."

Now, however, she felt that she was getting to know him very well, and as she was greatly desirous of hearing Bishop Heavystone of Northern Nova Zembla preach at the Church of the Heavenly Spire on Madison avenue next Sunday evening, she thought she could safely ask Jack to accompany her.

Jack had never fancied the chaperon act. In fact, it had wearied him exceedingly, but he had never dared to protest against it.

But when he received her invitation he saw a chance to give her a gentle hint of his sentiments on the subject; so he sent her an immediate reply written in her own sweet style:

My Dear Miss Proper—It was ever so kind of you to think of me, and I shall be greatly charmed to accept your delightful invitation for next Sunday evening. I presume, of course, that you will have no objection to my bringing my mother? Yours sincerely, SURPRISED AT HIM.

She Thought Any Artist Would Know What She Meant.

It is never wise, it is never kind, to "put on airs," and when those persons who endeavor to clothe themselves in vast superiority come to grief it is seldom that they succeed in obtaining any especial sympathy in their discomfiture. A well known American artist was last summer sketching in the galleries of the Louvre in Paris. Being at work, he had of course something the appearance of being a habitue of the place, and as such he was several times addressed by the visitors.

On one occasion he was approached by a couple of ladies, one of whom asked:

"Can you tell us where to find the statue of Cupid and"——

She paused in the evident hope that he would help her out, but he had heard the name Psyche pronounced in so many different ways that he was curious to see what would be made of it now. The visitor, finding that he would not pronounce the name, turned appealingly to her companion, and the other lady said with much briskness:

"Why, of course you know. The famous statue of Cupid—and the person who is with him."

There was a very different air about the lady who one day haughtily said to the artist:

"Will you be so kind as to direct me to the statue of Catherine de Medici?"

"The statue of Catherine de Medici!" he repeated in some perplexity. "I don't remember such a statue."

The smile of the visitor was more superior than ever as she replied:

"Oh, it is one of the best known statues here. I supposed that any artist would know where it is to be found."

There was so much scorn in her accents as she pronounced the word "artist" that the gentleman was at once amused and annoyed.

"I am an artist," he said, "but I cannot help you unless it might be that you have made a mistake, and it is the Venus de Medici you are looking for."

The expression which came over the face of the superior questioner was both ludicrous and self betraying.

"Why," she stammered, "it was a Venus de Medici that I wanted, of course. Do you know where that is?"

"Oh, yes," he answered, smiling. "Any artist can tell you that."—Boston Courier.

A Case of Pride.

Pride and poverty often go hand in hand. A lady advertised for a woman to take her washing, and was called upon by a young girl in a veil and kid gloves, who said that her mother would like to get family washing, as she needed the money.

"Will you take it with you?" asked the lady.

"Oh, no, ma'am. Not in the daytime," said the girl, looking quite hurt. "I will come for it after dark."

But she did not come, and the lady, after waiting several days, sent her washing to a laundry. In about two weeks the girl called in the evening.

"I've come for the wash," she said.

"But you are too late. I have made other arrangements," said the lady. "Besides, you did not keep your word and come that evening, as you said you would."

"I know it, ma'am," answered the girl, "but when I promised I forgot that it was moonlight. You see I couldn't carry home a wash when it was as light as day."—Detroit Free Press.

Fixed.

"Swithins, is that you? I never saw you with a beard before."

"How do you like it, Swilkins?"

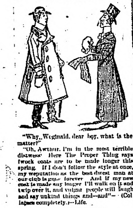
"Don't like it at all. It doesn't become you."

"That's what everybody says."

"Why don't you shave it off?"

(With a heavy sigh) "I wish I could, Swilkins, but I've just had my photograph taken for my Columbian exposition pass. Got to wear this beard for six months—darn it!"—Chicago Tribune.

Those Long Frock Coats.



"Why, Weginald, dear boy, what is the matter?"

"Oh, Awthur, I'm in the most terrible distwess. Here The Proper Thing says fwock coats are to be made longer this spring. If I don't follow the style at once, my weputation as the best dwest man at our club is gone forever. And if my new coat is made any longer I'll walk on it and twip over it, and vulgar people will laugh and say unkind things and—and"— (Collapses completely.)—Life.

Dimling—Yes, he has more than most people.

"Indeed!"

"To my knowledge he has a cork leg and arm and a set of false teeth."—Truth.

Young Man—Yes, of course.

"Give her the best your pocket can buy every birthday, but at Christmas, New Year's and such times give her only inexpensive little tokens. Form that habit."

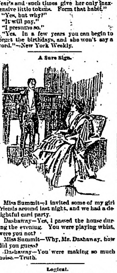
"Yes, but why?"

"It will pay."

"I presume so."

"Yes. In a few years you can begin to forget the birthdays, and she won't say a word."—New York Weekly.

A Sure Sign.



Miss Summit—I invited some of my girl friends around last night, and we had a delightful card party.

Dashaway—Yes, I passed the house during the evening. You were playing whist, were you not?

Miss Summit—Why, Mr. Dashaway, how did you guess?

Dashaway—You were making so much noise.—Truth.

Logical.

Mrs. Bloomfield—I hear that Mr. Moremud has married Miss Trivvett. She's blind, you know. Isn't it a pity?

Mr. Bloomfield—Isn't what a pity? The fact that she is married?

"That she is blind, of course. But it is a good thing Mr. Moremud fell in love with her. He's so rich and able to take care of her. It seems so unselfish, too, for a man to marry a woman afflicted like that, yet it is much better for a blind man to marry a woman with good eyesight than to mate with a blind woman, and it is better for the deaf and dumb to marry the hearing and seeing than to marry those afflicted like themselves."

"Why?"

"Because one can supply the deficiencies of the other and so be of assistance to each other."

"Well, I don't think so. I think a blind man ought to marry a blind woman."

"Why?"

"So as to reduce the amount of suffering in the world."

"How would intermarriage of blind people do that?"

"Just in this way. When a man and woman marry, the two become one. Reduces the number of blind people 50 per cent. See?"—Pittsburg Chronicle Telegraph.

No Delay.

The Philadelphia Record tells of a carpenter who was sent to make a new door for a house about five minutes' walk from his employer's store, but forgot his footrule. A little thing like that, however, didn't disconcert him. He was a big fellow, so he spread his enormous arms and found he could just reach from the doorstep to the top of the structure. With his arms outstretched he ran toward the carpenter's store, and meeting a fellow employee shouted, "Don't stop me, Tom; I've got the size of the door between my two hands!"

Visitor—Is Mr. Jinks in?

Flunkey—Mrs. Jinks is out of town.

Not Truly Brave.

Oh, fiercely fought he in the wars!
His courage oft was noted,
And three times he for gallantry
Was honored and promoted.

Where bullets flew as thick as fleas
And almost as annoying,
Well to the front, he bore the brunt
When death with men was toying.

The shriek of shells no terror brought,
Though comrades fast were falling;
He stood alone in trenches strewn
With carnage most appalling.

He smiled on death with a scornful smile,
And fear and he were strangers.
When blood flowed free he laughed in glee,
Found food for mirth in dangers.

Yet now his noble courage fails—
His heart is near to stopping—
It shakes his nerves when his wife observes,
"John, come with me a-shopping."

A PNEUMATIC SHOE.

Tennis Players and Pedestrians May Enjoy an Easy Bounce.

Perhaps one of the queerest things ever introduced is a shoe for tennis players, with a good deal of bounce promised in the botom of it. The sole is furnished with four cushions of inflated rubber, designed to give springiness to the feet when engaged in the game. The sole itself is of rubber, to which these pneumatic tubes are attached. One would suppose these shoes well adapted for high jumping, and, of course, there is no possibility of slipping in them. For long-distance walking they are said to be unexcelled. They are buoyant, and prevent the least shock to the system over hard roads or walks. Of course, if the air cushions get punctured en route, the same difficulty attends the accident, and the same remedy must be resorted to, as in the case of the ruptured tire of the bicycle. Prejudice in the matter of looks will probably deprive many pedestrians, if not tennis players, of their benefits.—Shoe and Leather Reporter.

Writing Business Letters.

Business letters should be short and to the point, writes Elizabeth Robinson Scovil in a helpful article on "The Art of Letter-Writing" in the Ladies' Home Journal. In ordering articles state as nearly as possible exactly what is wanted. If the price is known mention it, and write the amount required clearly. It is trying to receive a gross when one intended to purchase a single thing, or vice versa.

Friendly letters should be full of details, telling all the interesting little facts one friend would ask another if they could sit down, side by side, to talk. Bits of news that seem very trivial to the sender are often welcomed with joy by the recipient. Do not grudge a little time and pains to keep those nearest and dearest to you in touch with your daily life, even though you are widely separated.

An Enterprising Industry.

A novel kind of insurance has been started in New York. An ambulance service, with quite a large subscription list, has been organized for broken trucks and carriages, by which, if a heavily-loaded dray or any other vehicle breaks down in the streets and threatens to block the traffic, the injury can be repaired temporarily in a few minutes, and any possible damage to exposed goods from the weather is thus avoided. The service has already established four stations in different parts of the city, and owners of teams who are insured in it have only to notify one of the stations when an accident occurs, and the ambulance is immediately sent.

Chocolate Cake.

Make and bake the cake as for jelly cake. Then take one little square of Baker's chocolate, add to it one heaping table spoonful of sugar; put these in a small bowl, and set this bowl in a little saucepan half full of boiling water, and set the two together on the stove. When the sugar and chocolate have melted, add two tablespoonfuls of milk and one-half a teaspoonful of vanilla, boil for five minutes and then spread between the layers as with the jelly.—Good Housekeeping.

MODERN DESPAIR.

He used to fancy she would see him next
With blossoms heaped about his quiet head;
That she would kneel repentant at his side,
And mourn her scorn too late when he was dead.

He did not die; but when they met next year
His woes and wrongs again burst into flame;
He longed to score her now with stinging words,
But he, alas, could not recall her name!

LOSS OR GAIN.

By Laura G. Ackroyd.

"How do you do, Mr. Seymour? This is surprising."

Paul started. He had been engrossed in thought, and the exclamation was totally unexpected. His eyes lit up as he lifted his hat to the two girls and the lady who accompanied them, and from the expression of pleasure on his face it was evident that these were old friends.

"I am glad to meet you," he said heartily, shaking hands with each in turn. "You have saved me from despair. I am about sick of Paris."

"Sick of Paris!" echoed Jenny, the elder of the two girls. "Now could any one be sick of Paris? I don't think I should be if I stayed here for ever."

"You might if you were alone," said Susie, glancing at Paul, with an effort to throw off a momentary confusion. "Having friends with you makes all the difference."

"It does, indeed," assented Paul. "How long do you stay here, Mrs. Taylor?"

"Well, we thought of going to-morrow, but I suppose Sussie must see the fete," turning kindly to her niece. "This is her first trip, and we're trying to make it pleasant for her."

"Do you enjoy it, Miss Madison?"

"Yes, very much," she replied enthusiastically, "I never spent such a lovely time."

"A first trip is always delightful," said he.

"When did you arrive?" asked Mrs. Taylor.

"And how long have you been in Europe?"

They had turned and were walking slowly up the Avenue des Champs Elysees. There had been rain not an hour ago; a blue mist hovered in the distance, and a thousand raindrops quivered and fell from the shining foliage of the trees as the wind swept lightly past. The sunny roadway was full of carriages; dark eyes and vivacious faces framed in spring finery met one at every turn. Here and there a gay uniform added brightness to the scene, and above all shone the delicious blue of a perfect sky, flecked by little rings of clouds drifting like snow over the roofs of the city. Paris rejoiced in the freshness of springtime; it seemed good to be alive on such a day.

"I have been here a fortnight," returned Paul, "and it is a couple of months since I left the United States. I spent a considerable time in England, and finally came over here. I am going on to Rome by way of Switzerland, and intend to stay there some time, to study."

"That's strange," exclaimed Jennie, "we're going into Italy, too, by the same way, so perhaps we shall be traveling companions. Now isn't that nice?" turning to Susie.

Susie's face wore a troubled pucker. Paul noticed the expression, and his lips compressed. He plunged into animated conversation and talked so indefatigably to Mrs. Taylor that the good lady was considerably astonished. He was rather a silent young man usually. Paris had done him good, she conjectured, looking up at his dark, handsome face, and however sick he had become of it, apparently he suffered from no morbid tendencies. They walked on loiteringly to the Place Vendome, where Mrs. Taylor stopped.

"Our hotel is just here," she said. "I suppose you are at the Continental—your father always stayed there, and we generally go to places upon other people's recommendations, don't we?"

"I suppose so; but with me it is rather different. I am not staying at any hotel as a matter of fact, but in a couple of rooms near Notre Dame. It's an odd little place, but it suits me, only I haven't got much room to turn around."

Mrs. Taylor lifted her eyebrows. "You must find it nice and quiet. Are you painting in your vacation?"

"Oh! yes," with a laugh, "I didn't come for pleasure alone. I generally work a considerable part of the day, and take my gaities in the evening."

"Well, if you have no other engagements, will you come to us on Monday evening? We shall be very pleased indeed to have you, and can go all together to see the illuminations."

"Thank you, I shall be delighted."

There was a general handshake all round, a few remarks from Jennie, and they parted.

"How quiet you are, Susie," said Mrs. Taylor.

That afternoon as the girls were changing their dresses, the mails came up.

"One each," said Mrs. Taylor, entering the room. "I have the newspapers. I thought if you got hold of them, you'd never be ready," she added as she left them.

"I see Kate's got rid of Amanda," murmured Jennie, skimming her letter. "I never saw any one like her for running about after new girls. Say, don't you think there'll be an account of Maidie's wedding in the paper?" she continued, jumping and pulling down her hair. "Mercy, Su, what makes you so quiet?"

"I've had a little disappointment, that's all," sighed Susie, folding her letter. "Come, Jennie, let's make haste."

"Are you not going to tell me your news?" cried her cousin, laying her bare white arms around the other's shoulder.

"Oh! it's nothing—much, only I've lost the medal," and a burst of tears accompanied this statement.

"For pity's sake! Why I thought—"

"So did I," sobbed Susie, despondingly. "Oh! I'm a regular baby—but you can't think how I tried."

"Who's got it?"

"Madge Dennis, a girl who didn't seem to trouble a bit about it. But the judges have given the award to her picture, and, of course, she has two years' attendance at the art school now, free."

"Well, that is a shame. There's something wrong about it."

"No, there isn't," replied Susie, with a sense of justice. "Madge seems to have the touch of a genius, and does everything without the slightest effort, which gives one the impression that she doesn't try. Mother seems vexed—that's the worst of it."

"Well, you did your best."

"But don't you see, Jennie, when this school was opened, I was mad to go for a term. Every one said my talent ought to be cultivated, and mother gave her consent at last, though it was hard to afford the money. But I told her I would be sure to get the medal if I worked hard for it. Think what those two years would have done for me! I should have gone on well after that, and in time made money. Oh! Jennie, it humiliates me so. Now I can't study art any longer—we couldn't afford the fees."

"Oh! well, don't trouble; something's sure to turn up," cried Jennie, who possessed a Micawber-like disposition. "Never say die. You shall come and stay with us in the winter, and join the city classes. Cheer up, dear; crying makes one look so wretched."

Suesie smiled ruefully through her tears. "It is inconceivable that a girl should be so vain," she said, and then stopped suddenly short, with a flash of remembrance, while a vivid color flamed over her face and brow.

Jennie was a wise young woman. She looked at her watch, and, having ascertained that half an hour must elapse before the proposed drive in the Bois, pushed her cousin into a chair, and perched on the back of another.

"Now it's no good trying to keep a secret from me, Sue. Do you think I can't guess. Isn't it Paul Seymour?"

Susie started. "Jennie, if you knew how I hate myself at this moment!"

"Why, whatever for?"

"Let me tell you. I met Mr. Seymour at your house, as you know. Well, in the summer before his father died, he came down our way and stayed near us—that you know, too. And he did nothing either then or in town so far as I could see but live extravagantly and idle his time. Before the fall he asked me—if I would—marry him."

Jennie nodded intelligently.

"I told him I couldn't, that I loved art best. He said he painted, a fact I never knew, but he spoke so indifferently of it, and seemed to think my decision so cruel, that I got mad. I really did, and told him that under no circumstances could I ever love a man who had no definite aim in life. All he said was, 'you are my object in life.'"

"And did you send him away?"

"Yes, but that's not all. He begged me to become engaged to him so much, that I said I would—if I didn't get the medal! He looked very stern. He said I was not true to myself, but, though I placed him so low in comparison with art, he would accept my decision, though he felt quite sure that I should get the medal."

A little gleam of fun came into Jennie's eyes. What woman cares not to hear of another's love affairs?

"Poor child, and so you will have to marry Paul Seymour," she said demurely.

"No, no, how could I? Jennie, how shall I meet him on Monday?"

"As for that, he won't know the result of the competition unless you tell him."

"Yes he will, that's the worst of it. He knows one of the judges, and he told me distinctly that he would hear as soon as I should," and Susie crimsoned with mortification.

"You mustn't cry, you really mustn't," cried Jennie, jumping up hastily. "Here, sponge your eyes, and I'll do your hair."

"I feel miserable, and so would you in my position," murmured Susie.

"I don't think I should, if I loved him," whispered Jennie audaciously.

"Ah! but then I—"

"Just so," said Miss Taylor with a merry laugh, deftly braiding her cousin's chestnut hair.

* * * * * * *

"Miss Madison, have you seen the Venetian gondolas?"

"No; where are they?" said Susie, looking vaguely around as if she expected to find them in the sky.

"Just over there beyond the bridge; come and see."

Susie hesitated. "I think," and she looked at Mrs. Taylor, "Auntie is too tired."

"So I am, child, go along, and we'll wait for you here. Jennie and I have seen it before." So Susie went.

"How lovely!" she exclaimed, as the beautiful little vessels lit with soft amber and pink glided over the bosom of the water in a shining row. "And look at Aladdin's palace," pointing to the Trocadero, outlined with brilliant lights. Her eyes sparkled. How gay it was! The Tower Eiffel a blaze of crimson, the gleam of a revolving electric light sweeping the sky, the bridges with their thousands of colored lamps, the soft, seductive lap of the waters and the eager, excited, laughing crowd that swayed and crushed its way over the bridge, all was new and strange, and she lost herself in contemplating the magic scene.

"I suppose we must go back," she said presently, sighing unconsciously as she lifted her eyes.

But when the reached the comparatively quiet corner where Mrs. Taylor and Jennie had promised to remain, they were nowhere to be seen. Susie looked around with a face full of alarm.

"It's easy to lose one another in a crowd like this," said Paul; "however, let us try and find them."

Together they pushed their way through the dense crowds to the Place de la Concorde, with its interlacing strings of gigantic pearl-like Globes and musical splash of fountains, and as slowly back again, scanning the sea of faces narrowly, but in vain. They stopped at last in a quiet thoroughfare, and looked at each other.

"Don't be anxious," said Paul, "if they can't find us they will return to the hotel. Mrs. Taylor can trust you with me?"

"Oh! yes," flushing under his quiet smile. "Then we'd better go back at once."

"As you wish; but while we are together, let me just say a few words to you."

There were few passers-by; the street was unilluminated, and the dull murmur of the holiday-makers could be heard but faintly in the distance. Now and then a lumbering fiacre rolled past them in the darkness.

"Susie, you remember our conversation last summer? Since then my father has died, a comparatively poor man, as you will have heard."

"No."

"My income is therefore considerably lessened; but I have managed to sell some pictures lately, and shall push forward I hope. But under these circumstances I scarcely dare ask you to redeem the promise you made. Give me an answer, however, and if you cannot love me, Susie, I will not trouble you again."

"Mr. Seymour, I feel ashamed of myself," said Susie bravely. "I quite thought I should get the medal and—I didn't. I even ventured to remonstrate with you, what must you have thought of me!"

"I only thought of you as the sweetest little girl in the world. As for the remonstrance, it did me good, I think. Sweetheart, is art still everything to you?"

"No," she uttered slowly.

"Shall I release you from your promise?"

"No," she said again. "I am willing to redeem it if you will never remind me of the medal."

He would have liked to take this little piece of feminine inconsistency into his arms, but for the passers-by.

"Do you think you love me, Susie?"

"Yes," returned she, with a bewitching quiver of her pretty lips. But what they said to Mrs. Taylor I don't know.

Breed for use. No matter whether it is a cow, a horse or a hog, see that the "points" are such as will be of practical value, and help serve the purpose for which the animal is needed. There has been somewhat too much of breeding for "show points."

THE HERO OF A TRAGEDY.

How a Dog Showed His Grief for the Loss of a Good Friend.

It is a confident person who undertakes a limit to the understanding of animals. The wife of a government official at Quebec had a spaniel named Spot and a kitten whose flower-like face gave her the name of Pansy. The two were great friends. Spot would take Pansy's head in his mouth and gently roll her to and fro. One Sunday morning the two were at play. The dog was in high spirits and too rough, for alas! when he let go of the kitten she did not scamper away as usual.

The dog capered about her, running backward and forward to entice her to play, but the kitten did not move. Then he turned her over with his nose, teased her with his paw; still she did not move. Spot then showed signs of great uneasiness. He would pause, then begin again and coax her to get up. At length he seemed to realize that Pansy would never get up any more, and then he knew the meaning of death. The sense of loss and its practical results he proceeded to show. With every evidence of distress he carried her to the side of the walk. Then he dug a hole, put the kitten in it, and carefully covered it with earth and went away. When the family came home from church they were surprised not to be met as usual by the dog and cat. A member of the family called from the window, where he had been watching the sad incident, "Call Spot." The dog was called and came creeping on all fours to his master's feet, where he lay a spectacle of grief and quiet. "Ask for Pansy," prompted the witness. The question was asked and the dog looked up in mute appeal. The group moved down the walk to the newly made grave, but the dog refused to follow, and crawled abjectly away. A few moves with a cane revealed the kitten's body. Spot was again called. He came dragging himself along and lay groveling at his master's feet. No one could doubt the dog's anguish. It was not so much their duty to blame as to console him in his grief.

ABRAHAM WHIPPLE.

He Wanted the Speaker's Ear Inclined His Way Awhile.

Dr. Hildreth in his "Memoirs of the Early Settlers of Ohio," devotes a chapter to Abraham Whipple of Rhode Island. He was born in 1733, and was one of the first to take a hand in the revolutionary war. In 1786 he was elected a representative to the legislature from the town of Cranston. The advocates of the paper-money system were then in power, and had chosen Othniel Gorton, a clumsy old man for speaker. Gorton was in the habit of keeping a large quid of tobacco in one side of his mouth, which pressed out one of his cheeks. Most of the debaters were on the opposite side of the hall from that on which Commodore Whipple sat, and the speaker's face was commonly turned that way. Once, in the course of the debate, Whipple had cogitated a speech, which he waited for an opportunity to deliver. At last, out of patience, he rose and called: "Mr. Speaker!" The speaker, whose face was turned the other way, did not hear him. He raised his voice to its utmost: "Mr. Speaker!" Gorton started, and, turning to the commodore, said: "I hear you." Thereupon Whipple began: "I wish, Mr. Speaker, you would shift your quid of tobacco from your starboard to your larboard jaw, that it might give your head a cant this way, so that you could sometimes hear something from this side of the house." Then he went on with his speech.

Hotel Stationery Fiends.

"How much money do you think it costs in a year to be obliging?" said one of the clerks at the Southern yesterday. "Why, of course, I haven't the remotest idea what the actual outlay is in dollars and cents, but I know it costs something for stationery alone. The people who, in the course of a year, use the least amount of paper and envelopes are the guests of the hotel. They only write business letters and they never write unless they have to. Yet, here comes a man, watch him, he never stopped in the house and never will. He is going to the desk to get paper and envelopes, of course. We have got to give them to him. We don't know, he may be a friend of somebody in the house and it would cause trouble to refuse him. Well, he, and people like him, cost us hundreds of dollars a year for stationery that we could just as well save, only we can't afford to save it. Funny, isn't it, that we are compelled to throw away money simply because we know there is no use trying to save it."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Freak.

"You say you were in the Union army during the war?"

"Yes, sir, I was at Gettysburg."

"At Gettysburg? Well, I suppose you have written a magazine article about the mistakes of the battle?"

"No, sir, I have not."

"Why, my dear sir, you needn't beg. You are the only soldier living who has not written an article on the subject. Why, man alive, you are a freak. You can get $100 a week in a museum.—Texas Siftings.

A Disagreeable Subject.

"Papa, our physiology says that conversation at meals should be of a pleasant character," replied Tommy. "Let's talk about the foot-ball match."—The Million.

Teaching the Men a Lesson.

The women of Rio Grande, N. J., taught their husbands, brothers and sweethearts a political trick or two, in the recent election of a school trustee, says the Argonaut. They claimed that their rights were being trampled in the dust by their lords and masters, and boldly announced that they intended to rectify the wrong by electing a school trustee pledged to their interests. They put forward as their champion Charles W. Saul, the handsome station agent of the West Jersey railroad, who had endeared himself to every female heart in the place by his obliging manners as well as his good looks. Saul willingly accepted the honor, and the women started in to win. They canvassed the entire district and instructed servants and washerwomen that to vote against Saul meant dismissal. As a consequence, the women were at the polls in force. The main portion of the community were jealous of Saul and picked out their best man, in the person of Squire F. N. Harris, to run against him Although the men hustled for votes, they could not match the winningways of the women, and several ning ways of the women, and several vote at all if the women did. When the ballots were counted Saul was found to be elected by a majority of 10.

Why It Went Off.

The crowded street car flew the track unexpectedly and the conductor went for the driver.

"Here," he exclaimed, angrily, "what made that car go off?"

"Cause it was loaded, I guess," responded the driver, with a grin, and the passengers guyed the conductor.—Godey's Magazine.

RAGING MONTANA RIVERS

FILL BANK FULL AND BECOME DANGEROUS.

Streams Attain an Unusual Heigh and the Waters Are Still Rising—Railway Traffic Is Partially Suspended.

Mountain Torrents.

Helena, Mont., Special, May 22.—Mountain streams all over the state are rapidly filling up bank full and becoming raging torrents. The warm weather for the past week has melted a good deal of the snow on the mountains and rain has fallen in several sections of the state. A large number of small bridges has been carried away and the railroads have increased their crews and are struggling to keep their tracks and bridges in place. It does not look as if there will be any further traffic over the Belt Mountain branch of the Great Northern for some days to come. Most of the track is gone between Monarch and Neihart. Three bridges are out between Monarch and Armington, and considerable of the rest of the track is under water. All attempts at traffic have been suspended until further notice.

The World's Fair Gates.

Chicago, May 22.—Tens of thousands of men and women paraded up and down on the thoroughfares outside the world's fair grounds to-day peering wistfully through the closed gates of the White City and murmuring regrets at their inability to gain admittance. Some of the louder spoken ones called down maledictions on the powers that sealed the beauties to them, but on the whole the crowd was an orderly one. Men kept their tempers, evidently buoyed by the belief that the day would be the last day of sunday closing. It was by far the largest Sunday turnout since the exposition opened. Transportation lines and the army of fakirs located in the vicinity of the grounds did an enormous business.

The pressure was no doubt due that the Sunday closing order might be revoked during the day. Many doubted the story that the fair would be closed to-day until denied admittance by the gatekeepers. The fakirs flourished as never before. The crowd had money, and being unable to spend it in the exposition they turned to the cheap amusements in the vicinity. Hundreds of shouters yelled themselves hoarse and rendered the day hideous in their efforts to secure their share of the golden harvest.

To-day a gang of about fifteen pickpockets congregated in Muncie and accomplished good work among the crowd of eighteen thousand people who were attending the meeting. Burglarizing Phil Armour's House.

Chicago, May 22.—Two burglars made an effort to break into the residence of Philip D. Armour early this morning, and were driven off by Officer McGary after a desperate fight. The officer saw the men trying to break open the rear door of Mr. Armour's house, and at once grappled with them. One of the men and the officer rolled down a long flight of steps, but McGary kept his hold and was getting the best of the fight, when his companion came to his aid. Together they were too much for McGary, and both managed to escape. As they were climbing the iron picket fence McGary fired, bringing one man to the ground. He tried to reach him, but in climbing the fence, the officer's clothing caught, and before he could free himself the injured man was assisted off by his companion. McGary was badly injured by falling on the sharp pointed pickets.

May Desecrate a Battlefield.

Washington, May 22.—Secretary Lamont's attention has been called to threatened injury to the historic battle field at Gettysburg, Pa., by the construction of a trolly road over the principal parts of the park, and he has practically decided to protect the interest of the government in the matter. He will soon appoint a commission of officers to superintend the marking of the lines of battle, and has instructed Acting Judge Advocate General Lieber to ascertain the full extent of the government's rights in the premises. In the opinion of many army officers who have investigated the subject there is no doubt of the powers of the government to take complete charge of the field under that portion of the sundry civil bill which appropriates so much money for the preservation of the battle lines.

Sowing Wheat.

Pembina, Special, May 22.—Wheat seeding is almost completed, except on the river farms, which will take all of this week to complete. The weather has been excellent for seeding, except three days last week. All the early seeding is up, and shows an excellent stand.

Around Hallock, Kittson county, Minn., wheat seeding is almost completed, except along the river, and the acreage is considerable more than last year. Wheat seeding continued up to June 5 last year, with results as good as those from early seeding.

Bright Prospects.

Grantsburg, Wis., Special, May 22.—The prospects are bright for a very heavy crop in this county the present season. But a small amount of wheat will be raised. The greater part of the small grain will be oats, the number of acres greatly exceeding those of former years. The prospects are that 500,000 bushels of potatoes will be raised this season, providing it does not become too dry. About 300,000 bushels of potatoes were raised last year in this county.

Down in Nicaragua.

Panama, May 22.—The government of Nicaragua notified the Pacific Mail Steamship company this morning that its vessels must not stop at San Juan while that port is in the hands of the revolutionists, but may land passengers, mail and freight at Corinto. No movements of importance are being attempted by the revolutionists, as they are waiting for more arms and ammunition.

Three Children Burned.

Buffalo, N. Y., May 22.—The cottage on Grand island occupied by John Downey, wife and five children was burned to the ground this morning. Three of the children—John, aged seven; Annie, aged six, and Frank, aged four—perished in the flames. It is supposed that a big Newfoundland dog belonging to the family caused the fire by overturning a lamp.

New York Gets Kelly.

New York, May 22.—Michael J. Kelly arrived in this city this afternoon from the West and met Manager Ward at the St. James hotel. It did not take the "king" very long to come to terms and satisfactory arrangements were soon made, whereby the New York team will have the benefit of his services for the remainder of the season.

Much-Needed Moisture.

Michigan City, N. D., Special, May 22.—A much-needed rain has been steadily falling for the past sixteen hours, completely repairing the damage done to crops by the recent high winds.

The Passengers Were Cool.

New York, May 22.—The steamship Roanoke, of the Old Dominion line, backed into her dock at the foot of Beach street at 8 o'clock to-night with a fire burning fiercely in her hold. At 4 o'clock this afternoon, as the steamship was passing Long Branch, smoke was seen issuing from her shaft tube, and an investigation showed that the vessel was afire. Capt. John G. Halters and his officers went to the passengers and quietly informed them that there was a fire smoldering in the cotton stowed in the after hold of the ship, but that there was not the least danger, and even if there was the vessel was so near to land that everybody could be landed in safety and with little difficulty. The seventy-five passengers behaved admirably under the circumstances, not one of them even taking the trouble to pack a valise.

He succeeded in finding eleven farmers in this vicinity and gave them orders on the county for amounts not to exceed thirty dollars The county takes as security a seed grain note due this fall with interest at five per cent. This will provide all with seed and shows that all who have ground prepared have obtained their seed,

The publishing of long lists of wedding presents is considered by most people in questionable taste, but the following quoted from an exchange is unique in its kind: From father and mother the bride, one Jersey calf: from bride to groom, one hair wreath made from hair of her entire family, and also six white shirts; from brother Elias, one book of poems, one dream book, one polite letter writer and a dog; from Aunt Harriet, six hens and a rooster, also a jar of catsup; from cousin Sarah one poem made up by herself on the bride and bridegroom, 15 verses in all

A schoolboy's composition on "The Editor" ran as follows: The editor is one of the happiest individuals in the world. He can go to any circus in the afternoon and evening without paying a penny, also to inquests and hangings. Has free tickets to theaters, gets wedding cake sent him, and sometimes gets a licking but not often, for he can take things back in the next issue, which he generally does. While other folks have to go to bed early the editor can sit up late every night and see all that is going on. When I am a man I mean to be an editor so that I may stay out late at night. That will be jolly."

Fire was discovered in the roof of the Commercial hotel last Monday afternoon about five o'clock. The fire department responded quickly to the alarm but it was soon evident that the building could not be saved. The wind was blowing a stiff breeze from the north and the building was entirely consumed in about an hour. Nearly all the furniture was saved and by hard work the barn and out buildings were saved. Mr. Williams estimates the loss at $1800, He had $1000 insurance on the building in the Phoenix of Hartford and $500 in the Milwaukee Mechanics. The personal effects saved were moved into the American house and Mr. Williams has already rented that place and opened up business again.

The farmer's institute which will be held in this city on Friday and Saturday July 7th and 8th, will be conducted by J. C. Curryer, of Mankato, and will be of great interest to our farmers. There will be a course of lectures delivered during the institute giving pointers and experiments of interest to all farmers. Our farmers should all remember the date, July 7th and 8th, and attend.—Crookston Times.

S. M. Owen, of the Farm, Stock and Home, has the following to say of Governor Nelson's elevator bill.

"The new Minnesota grain law, which subjects to state supervision and control the selling of every bushel of wheat and deprives the little "farmer's warehouse" of its former liberty seems to be founded on the theory that the chief villain in wheat buying is the local elevator man. It assumes that all the farmer has complained of heretofore was the tricks of the local elevator man, or his poor judgement (?) in grading and docking. This being the basis idea of the law it is no wonder its enactment was resisted by every legislator who understood the real system of grain buying in the state nor is it surprising that the law's passage through the legislature had to be facilitated by executive interferance and dictation. The local elevator man has been, is and will be clay in the hands of the potter. He is the servant of the combine, the "list" maker, the price maker, the dictator of local inspection. Under the new law the local elevator will receive, as before its daily orders to pay a stated price for wheat, and that price will be relatively uniform in the entire northwest. The element of competition in selling wheat that the grower has been praying, for is not only unrecognized but is absolutely annihilated by the new law. The fundamental evil of the existing system is unassailed; local impotency, if not innocence, is made to assume the mask of guilt, and law's thunderbolts are hurled at its harmless head, whereat the guilty smile and complacently pocket their excessive profits.

George Ralph is quite ill up in the pineries, east of the Red Lake reservation. A few days ago his men had to send to the agency for the doctor to attend him, and the last report states that he is improving, Mr. Ralph has about three weeks work in the woods yet to do, when his contract of surveying five townships will be finished He will then send his field notes to St. Paul and from there they go to Washington where they will be examined and if accepted, the towns will be thrown open to settlement These towns are nearly all covered with pine and some of them are very valuable, The best pieces are already settled on by squatters or are being picked out and located and when the day of opening arrives there will be the usual rush to the land office for filing. The towns are all in the St. Cloud district, which makes a long and expensive trip for filers.—Crookston Times.

The following were appointed on the 17th to succeed the old board in examining the Red Lake pine lands: Andrew Douglas, Alderly, Wis., chief; John Morgan, Aitkin, Minn.; Geo. H. Stratton, Brainerd, Minn.; Thomas S. Finney Rock Rapids, Minn; Theo H. Beaulieu White Earth, Minn.; R. Louden, Duluth Minn.; Robt. M. Hall, Griffin Ga. Patrick J. Conway, Manitowoc, Wis.; J. C. Harmon Chippewa Falls Wis.; R. H. Long, Janesville Ala.; Peter Veling, Beaver Dam Wis.; Edward F. Lorelle, Boone N. C.; D. F. Stacy Albert Lea, Minn.; Robert F. Looney Jr., Memphis, Tenn. It is to be hoped that the new examiners will at once get to work and have the pine put on the market as soon as possible. They will however, probably take things just as easy as did the retiring crew and the reservation will be opened when there is no possible excuse to pay any more saleries,

A Bad Case.

Once I was assistant to an elderly doctor in Ontario, who also ran a drug store. He was as peppery as a cayenne pod, and from time to time customers and patients sprung jokes on him just for the fun of hearing him blow off. On one occasion a well dressed young fellow called at the shop and asked the doctor to prescribe for a breaking out and a rash on his left arm. The doctor examined the limb and pronounced it to be a bad case of psoriasis and eczema.

"I suppose, doctor, you can cure it?" said the patient.

"Why, certainly," replied the doctor.

"How long will it take to get well?"

"Oh, I guess about two months," said the doctor.

"Quite sure, sir—is it a bad case?"

"Positively the worst I've seen."

"Then I will leave it with you and call for it again when cured," solemnly said the patient, slowly unfastening his arm, which was an artificial one and painted for the occasion.—Chemist and Druggist.

Burns Knew Better.

It was the fate of a practical and patriotic Scotchman of Rochester to assist at a meeting of a certain improvement society, the while a Shakespearean scholar dilated upon the virtues of his favorite writer. At the close of the meeting the stranger approached the lecturer, and the following dialogue ensued:

"Ye think a fine lot o' Shakespeare, doctor?"

"I do, sir," was the emphatic reply.

"An' ye think he was mair clever than Rabbie Burns?"

"Why, there's no comparison between them."

"Maybe no, but ye tell us the nicht it was Shakespeare who wrote 'Uneasy lies the head that wears the crown.' Now, Rabbi would never hae written sic nonsense as that."

"Nonsense, sir?" thundered the indignant doctor.

"Aye, just nonsense. Rabbi would hae kent fine that a king, or a queen either, disna gang to bed wi' the croon on their head. They hang it ower the back o' a chair!"—Exchange.

Habit.

"You have paid me nothing on account of my bill for six months," wrote a tailor to the editor of a suburban paper recently. "My capital," he continued, "does not admit of my giving such long credits. Kindly remit at once."

Inclosed in the envelope was a duplicate copy of the bill long past due, which the editor, solely through the force of habit as he maintained, inscribed "respectfully declined," and then tossed it into the waste basket.—New York Herald.

His Share.

Yes, this is her picture, drawn
By the sun's resistless touch!
Eyes of hazel like a fawn,
Hidden by the drooping lash.
Such a neck and shoulders too!
Ah, I thought you'd like her arms.
Surely artist never drew
Any goddess with such charms!
Flatters her? Oh, no, not much!
Her complexion's like a peach,
And her smile—that soulful touch
Which the lens could never reach.

Lucky man? Well, maybe, sir.
But this picture and one curl
Are all I have left of her,
For Jack Stockton got the girl!

Unreasonable.

She stood on the wrong corner and waved her umbrella frantically at the approaching street car.

Her Confession.

Mrs. Newed—I think you're a stingy old thing to refuse me this money.

Maybe you think this is a new business, sending out babies on application: it has been done before, however, but never have those furnished been so near the original samples as this one. which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The little darling rests against a pillow, and is in the act of drawing off its pink sock, the mate of which has been pulled off and flung aside with a triumphant coo. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Maidens Sold by Auction.

A singular custom obtains to this day in some of the towns of the Lower Rhine, namely, that of "selling" maidens at public auction. For nearly four centuries, on Easter Monday—auction day—the town crier or clerk of St. Goar has called all the young people together, and to the highest bidder sold the privilege of dancing with the chosen girl, and her only, during the entire year. The fees are put into the public poor-box.

MAKING HOT WATER PLEASANT.

Half-Cleaned Cooking Utensils Often Responsible for Its Bad Taste.

"There are many persons who insist that it is impossible for them to drink hot water and make all sorts of disagreeable faces about it," said an enthusiastic hygiene to a writer for the Brooklyn Citizen. "I have heard a great many people say this and for a long time I could not understand it. One day I dropped in upon one of my friends and found her very ill. I made up my mind that a little hot water would be beneficial and ran down to the kitchen to get it. While pouring out a glass for her it occurred to me that it was a good opportunity to indulge in a bit of it myself, so I poured a second glass and after it was cool enough I attempted to drink it. I didn't wonder that she had said she drinks hot water, for such a nauseous-tasting mess I think I never tried to swallow; in fact, I just absolutely couldn't do it and had to give it up. I hardly knew what to say to her when she, upon tasting, declared she couldn't take it to save her life. I could imagine nothing but dishwater in the taste of that liquid. Whether the maids were careless about their cooking utensils or what the difficulty was, I could not tell. I have experienced the same annoyance in hotels and other places. The water has a greasy, stale, intolerable flavor, and even the smell of it might, I should think, make a well person sick. I have a special little kettle for my hot water and take the greatest pains that nothing that will give it a disagreeable taste is ever allowed near it. When it is prepared it is as bright and clean and refreshing as the purest spring water. Ever since my little experience at my friend's house I have had no difficulty in accounting for the dislike of many persons for hot water."

Charging the Jury.

It sometimes happened during the era of "Reconstruction" in South Carolina that the quondam slave was promoted above his former master. So it happened that Pompey Smash, a coal black negro, became a "Trial Justice."

It was not long before Pompey had a case before him. When the jury arose and began moving toward the adjoining room for consultation one of the lawyers interposed and said, "May it please your honor, you have not charged the jury."

Whereupon Judge Pompey gathered up himself, and with all possible dignity said:

"Gen'men of dis jury, as dis is de fust time I have had you befo' me, I cha'ge each one of you one dollah and a half."

A PANE OF GLASS.

By Mrs. E. H. Hough.

"I am very sorry, Fred. I had got to like the girl very much, and she has been very faithful to her duties and a good saleswoman, and all that—but I cannot permit this pilfering to go on—it will lead to something worse before long. I think the best way to save her feelings will be to tell her at the end of the week that we don't require her services any longer, and in that way get quietly rid of her without any direct accusation. You know we took her solely on her own recommendation, without asking for any references—in fact, I'll do her the justice to admit that she frankly told us she could not furnish any, being a stranger in the place. But this stealing has been going on for a month now, and as far as we know or can find out, she is the first one here in the morning, and is here alone long enough to give her an opportunity to help herself. Another thing I have noticed, and that is that she has had several little trinkets lately which seem to me decidedly more extravagant than a girl with her means could afford to indulge in, unless she has come by them through such means as I begin to fear she is guilty of."

Fred bit his lip, and was silent.

It would not have helped the case any for him to have told his father just then that he knew the source from whence she had derived those little gifts, which he had contrived to convey to her in such a way that she would not be able to detect the giver, and so return them, and which it had afforded him such delight to see her wear, little dreaming at the time that they would only serve as additional means of strengthening suspicion against her.

He had been only waiting a favorable opportunity to speak to her of his feelings, and assure himself of her sentiments, before telling his father of the hopes he had been cherishing; but before that opportunity arrived this unexpected trouble had threatened disgrace and cast a shadow over the fair name of the girl he secretly loved.

"I'll stake my life, father, that she hasn't a trinket about her but what is honestly come by," he exclaimed, after a moment's embarrassed silence, "and that she is a thoroughly honest and trustworthy girl. Don't discharge her this week, father. Give her—give me one week more and let me see if I cannot discover the thief. I promise that if I find that it is indeed she, I will not try to shield her. But let me have that much time to try and discover the real culprit."

"I don't see how you are going to do it," replied Mr. Adams, looking around the apartment. "There is no way that I can see but by getting here ahead of the thief, whoever it is—and, of course, the money will not be taken with you looking on, and there is no way for you to conceal yourself in the room here. You know I have been accustomed to leave money in that drawer for the convenience of making change if it should be needed, before I get down in the morning, but nobody knows but you that I am in the habit of counting it every night before leaving, and that for the last month it has not balanced with the cashier's account, but constantly shows a deficiency. It must be taken in the morning, before we get here, and Miss Allen is, as she has said herself, the first one here—indeed, she has a key of her own, so that she can get in as early as she pleases."

Fred's eyes had been roving around the room while his father was speaking. There was, as he said, no possible chance for his concealing himself anywhere in the room without making the fact of that concealment evident, and thus defeating his purpose; but as he glanced over at the desk, which stood at the opposite side of the room, near the window, and in one drawer of which was kept the money for such miscellaneous expenses as postage, telegrams, and other incidental small expenditures, and from which sums that could not be accounted for had been missing for a month past, his face lightened. The window faced another window of a large building, the side of which was separated only by a narrow court, and which was for the time vacant, and a suggestion occurred to him, which he seized upon at once.

"I'll admit it does look against her, father," he said. "But I believe I can find a way in a week's time either to vindicate her, or prove that your suspicions are just; but I believe that it will vindicate her. Just let me have one more week, and if I don't discover the culprit by that time, I will make no further plea."

"All right, my boy," said Mr. Adams, smiling, and perhaps not altogether without an intuition as to the cause of his son's earnestness. "I can stand the loss of a few dollars more, I guess. Find the culprit, and you may name your own reward."

"I don't desire any reward," replied Fred.

But his troubled face told another story, and one that his father was not slow to detect.

Not only Margery Allen, but the three other girls in the employ of Mr. Adams' photographic establishment missed the frank, bright smile and pleasant word with which his son had been wont to greet them, and into Margery's pretty eyes crept a look of hurt surprise, mingled with a deeper feeling, that went to Fred's very heart. But he maintained his demeanor unshakingly—meanwhile, however, studying each face and act of the girls with a scrutiny he had never bestowed upon them before, and by night he had pretty well settled in his own mind as to the culprit; but to make that suspicion a certainty was the task that remained.

If any of the girls, in passing near the window where the desk stood, had chanced to glance at the building opposite, they might have noticed that it had been provided with a shade, with the exception of one pane of glass, where the shade had been cut away. But they either did not notice it, or did not think it of sufficient consequence to mention—if they did—and the day's work went on as usual, except that Margery remarked to herself, with a little faster beating of her heart, that it was the first day since her finding the employment that had been to her such a boon, that Fred's eyes had failed to meet hers with an encouraging or friendly smile, into which, of late, she had imagined she could detect a warmer sentiment.

The next morning the girls were at their work as usual when Mr. Adams and his son entered the establishment. Both gentlemen looked serious, but on Fred's face was also clearly manifest a look of triumphant satisfaction.

"Young ladies," said Mr. Adams, addressing his employes, "I have rather an unpleasant subject to introduce this morning, but it is not of my choosing, and I would prefer to give you an opportunity to acknowledge your act, than to charge you with it. Which of you is first here in the morning?"

"I believe I am, sir," answered Margery, to which the others assented.

"Well, I am sorry to report that for some time past I have been missing small sums of money from the drawer where I keep the change for incidental expenses, and to which you all have access, as occasion requires," continued Mr. Adams. "Now I will put it to you formally, Miss Adams, do you know anything in regard to the missing money?"

"I do not, sir," she replied, lifting her eyes to his face, with a look of perfect innocence and truthfulness, while Fred, in his delight and joy, could scarce retain himself from hugging her on the spot.

"Miss Wilson, do you?—or you, Miss Smith? or you, Miss Ferris?"

A most emphatic denial was the unanimous response.

"Well," said Mr. Adams, "it seems then we must resort to some other means to ascertain the culprit. What have you to say, Fred?"

"Merely to ask the young ladies if any of them recognize any one they know in this," responded Fred, drawing out a small plate and laying it before them. There was an excellent photograph of the interior of the room, and bending over the open drawer of the desk, in the act of taking some silver from it, was the unmistakable profile face and figure of Lottie Smith.

With a startled cry she drew back, covering her burning face with her hands.

"If you will tell me the whole story I will let you off with no greater punishment than being discharged from my service," said Mr. Adams, sternly. "Otherwise I shall call an officer and hand you over to him forthwith."

Overcome with terror at this threat, Lottie sobbingly confessed that she had been the thief, having coaxed the janitress to let her in on the plea that she wanted to get work early, and then slipping out again, and not returning until after Margery had arrived, so that if the theft was discovered, suspicion would fall upon her. Mr. Adams heard her to the end; then quietly requesting her to get her hat and cloak, attended her to the door and bowed her out; then returning to Margery, who was standing a little apart from the rest, he said in a tone of more than wonted kindness:

"There is a little story connected with this discovery, which there is not a fitting opportunity to tell here; but if you will allow my son to escort you to our house this evening to dinner, I will be happy to make you acquainted with my wife, and you can hear the sequel to this affair."

Margery bowed, too happy to speak after one eloquent look from Fred's eyes, and went back to her duties with a heart bounding high. At the appointed hour Fred accompanied her to his home, where, after being introduced to his mother, who took the orphan girl to her heart and embrace at once, they told her the story.

"The moment I looked at that window of the building opposite," Fred said in conclusion, "it occurred to me that I might make use of it as a point, not only of observation but from which I could obtain a view of the place and the culprit. By investigating and experimenting I found that I could photograph the room accurately. And I had a shade put up—leaving only one pane of glass exposed, in front of which I could place my machine and do the work without being seen in return. I was there this morning by daylight, arranged my apparatus, and, about half an hour before your time of coming, the door opened and Lottie Smith came in. I waited until she was in the very act of taking the money, as you see, and then secured my snap shot, that vindicated you, my darling, and has made me the happiest man alive—all by the aid of that blessed pane of glass."

He had not intended to make his avowel of love in such a fashion, but his joy and affection burst from him simultaneously, and the next moment he had her in a rapturous embrace from which she made no effort to disengage herself.

"Good-by, my dear daughter," Mrs. Adams whispered, as she bade her good-by before resigning her to Fred's care to escort her home. "You shall be my daughter in a very few weeks, if I have anything to say about it."

And that she not only had considerable to say about it, but said it, was evidenced by the modest but delightful little wedding that took place not long after, at which Fred and Margery were the principal parties in earnest, and, if their faces were any indication, the very happiest people that could be found anywhere.

REVENGE IS INDEED SWEET.

An Unsuspecting Judge Allows an Ex-Convict to Shave Him.

On one occasion Justice Manisty was on circuit at Exeter for the Assizes. One morning he left his lodging early for a stroll, and finding that he had plenty of time on his hands before the court assembled, he turned into a hairdresser's shop for the purpose of getting shaved and generally trimmed up.

Customers being scarce at that early hour there was only one assistant present in the place. When the judge entered the man jumped up with alacrity and bowed him into the operating chair with all a barber's suave politeness.

Having lathered his distinguished customer's face and stopped his razor with more than ordinary vigor, he commenced to attack the judicial stubble. But he hadn't gone far in his work before he suddenly paused, with one hand on the judge's nose and, the other waving the razor painfully near Sir Henry's throat.

"Blessed if I don't think," said the barber, "that you're the old cove what gave me five years at Winchester."

The judge's feelings may be better imagined than described; but he merely replied with what coolness he could summon to his aid:

"I don't know, my good fellow. I have a bad memory for faces."

However, the man went on shaving, and Justice Manisty congratulated himself that the ex-convict didn't bear malice.

This easiness of mind came a little too soon. After the shave the Judge, with characteristic determination, decided to carry out his original programme and have his hair cut as well.

To his horror the barber had no sooner exchanged the razor for his scissors than his locks began to fall in a perfect shower on the floor.

"Hold on, man, hold on!" exclaimed the judge. "I only want a trim up, I tell you. Don't cut it so short."

"Cut it short be blowed!" replied the barber, slashing away triumphantly, "you didn't cut it short when you gave me five years in the stone jug. This is the prison crop you've got to have, old man, as sure as a gun; so you'd best take it kindly."—London Tid Bits.

Electric Light for Balloons.

It is indicative of the importance which is attached to ballooning for war purposes in Europe, that even the Russians, who, as a rule, are not regarded as being in the van of scientific progress, have been turning their attention to the use of the search light for war balloons with considerable success. In some recent experiments in the lighting of large areas from a balloon, projectors of 5,000 candle power were used, and when these were carried to the height of 2,000 feet the rays of the electric light covered a surface of about 1,600 feet diameter, in spite of a thick mist. Even at a height of 800 feet a luminous ray could be projected which showed every object within its focus distinctly at a distance of three-quarters of a mile.

IT WAS ALL THE SAME.

"Nancy" Thought It Was "Bill," but It Was a Bear.

"It was when I was boss of a railroad shanty at Gresham, Ohio," said the little man, whose turn came to tell a yarn, "that I was an eye-witness to what I am about to relate, and I tell you, gentlemen, that Gresham was a mighty wild, lonely spot in those days, and houses were a mile apart. But that was before the railroad was built.

"The gang of men boarded and lodged at the shanty, but I was more fortunate, for I lodged with a widow who had a pretty daughter who was keeping company with a young backwoodsman, and I had the spare chamber over the living rooms. The lover was a big, brawny fellow, who came late to do his courting, and whose voice sounded like the scraping of a buzz-saw.

"One night as I sat at my window smoking my first pipe I heard his steps outside and saw his great bulk coming through the trees. It was unusually early for him, but I knew the coast was clear. But what was this? He did not usually come on all-fours, as he was now approaching the house. I looked again and saw my mistake. 'Some neighbor's dog,' I thought, but I was glad to be out of the way of such a powerful mastiff.

"Miss Nancy was rocking and singing in the room beneath. I had a curiosity to see if the dog would walk in upon her and peeped through the cracks of the pine floor.

"'Jehoshaphat!'" I nearly yelled, for it was no dog, but a big black bear, and he had swung the door open like a human being and trotted in.

"Like all women who expect company, Miss Nancy was not to be taken by surprise. She heard him fast enough, but went on rocking and singing with her back to him.

"Then he stood up on his feet and threw his arms around her and hugged her till I thought I heard the poor girl's bones crack, but I couldn't have moved or spoken to have saved my life.

"'You're late, Bill,' I heard her say, 'gimme another hug.'

"There was no answer, naturally, but the bear hugged her again, shivering the back of the rocker.

"'Easy, Bill; yer huggin' the cheer. Wat yer been eatin'? Seems like yer breath ain't nat'ral.'

"The bear gave Miss Nancy another hug and his paw swiped her cheek as he did so. It made her mad.

"'Yer meaner nor snakes, Bill. I've more than a mind to gin yer the shake, an' I will if yer don't hug prettier nor that. Yer ain't no more grip than a mouse. Why don't yer talk some?'

"At that moment Bill himself appeared on the scene and Mr. Bruin retreated. There was no scrimmage, for bears in Ohio were as tame as kittens, but as I withdrew my eye from the crack I heard Miss Nancy saying to the young man:

"'I kinder reckoned, Bill, that yer huggin' were powerful weak, an' I 'lowed to make yer git a new cheer, but I never suspicioned it were a real bear or I'd been kinder scared.'

"That beat all the domestic comedies I ever saw," concluded the little man, cheerfully, as he refilled his pipe, and we all coincided with him.—Detroit Free Press.

GETTING RID OF TENANTS.

An Ejectment Company Which Conducts a Novel Business in Boston.

Boston has an "ejectment company" which removes tenants "at reasonable rates." Ninety per cent of the ejected are found among the poor. "The first thing I ask a client," said the manager of this novel business to a New York Evening Post man, "is whether the obnoxious tenant has a lease. About 90 in 100 of the poorer classes do not. All right, then; he gives me a lease of the premises—and remember, it isn't a bogus lease, because the law says a lease may be made out for the purpose of gaining possession of a place in this manner. Then we give the tenants notice. They usually laugh at it and tear it up. All right. We wait awhile, then serve a writ on them. That usually does the work, although they usually stay until the last minute. If they do not go we issue an execution, and that gives us power to take the roof off the house. Sometimes it is almost necessary to do it, but we usually manage to get them out without much trouble. But if it is necessary to use force we do not hesitate to do it. I always take enough men along—a whole regiment if necessary." The causes of ejection are given as non-payment of rent, bad habits and "children." The company consists of a manager and a constable, the latter a man of "experience," who is very proud of the wiles he uses to clear premises of unfortunate and refractory tenants. "There was a case down at the West end," he said the other day, "where I got an old woman out of a place where she had lived over thirty years; I don't suppose one man in a hundred could have done it without getting it into the papers, yet nobody ever heard of it. Why? Simply because I went about it in the easiest way possible; treated her just the same as I would have treated my own mother. She shed a good many tears over it, and it took her a long time to realize that she had to go. She was half-blind and got around with difficulty. However, I got her out. It was a pretty delicate job and cost the owner of the house $37."

Early Impressions Are Lasting.

Every one must have found how difficult it is to eradicate early impressions, or to overcome prejudice acquired later in life. Our first impressions cling to us with a tenacity which no change of place or situation can destroy: The home of our childhood, the friends and associations of our youthful days, form images in our remembrance which can never be wholly obliterated. The wanderer from his native country may in his adopted home meet new associations and acquire more wealthy connections and a higher standing in society than he held in the land which gave him birth, still the humble dwelling in which he was reared, the partners of his early joys and sorrows, the habits he was accustomed to in his youth, are all "green spots" in his reminiscences, continually watered from the fount of never failing memory.

Lace Capes for Summer Wear.

Lace capes, fashioned very much like the winter models, with velvet or jetted yokes and collars, have made their appearance, like many other of the season's fashions, long before they are required. These capes are very handsome, indeed, especially those which are only garnitured with expensive cut jet ornaments and fringes. Some costly French capes have yokes and collars of gold and jet net, dotted with cabochons, and a few models are lined throughout with rows of jetted galloon in stripes falling over the cape from the yoke. The cape is thus stiffened to such an extent that it falls in lines that are altogether different from the soft, natural folds in which lace should fall.

The Women Who Attract Attention.

The elbows are now worn quite behind the waist. So runs the latest fashion mandate, which isn't as absurd as it sounds, says the Sun, for so universally recognized is the fact that a fine carriage is one of the essentials of a prepossessing appearance that the smart woman carries her head high, her chest well thrown out and her elbows necessarily fall well back out of the way.

This is particularly true of city women, who realize that the woman who makes the best effect is always the woman who carries herself well. On closer acquaintance the pretty face begins to tell, and somewhere between the two the dress comes in for a share of attention as to details with men.

And it is to please men that women dress, except a few spiteful women who dress to aggravate other women.

Senator Davis' Only Trip to Boston.

Senator Davis tells a good story on himself. He once started for Boston to see the place and hunt up the historic localities, but when he reached the hub it was hot weather. It was unusually warm, even for midsummer, and Mr. Davis went over to Young's hotel and secured a room. Then he went out to the nearest bookstore, purchased a copy of Virgil and returned to his quarters. For the next four days he never went out of the hotel and most of the time did not leave his room. During the entire stay he read Virgil and tried to forget he was on earth and in Boston. The senator proposes to make another trip to New England this summer, and if the weather permits intends to see Boston.—Kate Field's Washington.

The Horrid Men.

"Oh, those Chicago speculators! They are always looking for a corner in something."

"Yes, and when they find one somebody is certain to get squeezed."

He Did Not.

"Do you keep your mug in the shop?" asked the new barber of the man in the chair.

"Naw," was the reply. "I never have it here except while it's being shaved."

A Clever Young Man.

Mrs. Younghusband—Why can't you stay at home this evening, George? Your employer can get along without you.

MINNESOTA AT THE FAIR.

THE GREAT EXHIBIT OF THE NORTH STAR STATE.

The Educational Exhibit the Equal if not the Superior of Other States—The Agricultural Exhibit—The Forestry Exhibit.

Jackson Park, Special Correspondence.—The aim of the Minnesota board of world's fair managers in making exhibits at the world's fair has been to take great pains with those displays in which Minnesota by nature is fitted to excel all of the sister states. Of course this observation applies mainly to exhibits which have been made in the general buildings of the Columbian exposition in direct competition with other states. The two exhibits in which in the opinion of the managers, Minnesota has the best chance of exceling are the agricultural and educational. In these two lines Minnesota has for many years been in the lead, and if she cannot now make an exhibit which will surpass all competitors it will be a great surprise to many of her citizens. It was was a well known fact that at the New Orleans exhibit Minnesota had in every respect the most creditable educational display of any of the states and she cannot now afford to lose the enviable reputation which she then established. The large educational endowment of Minnesota, her rich university and flourishing normal schools ought to be able to make an exhibit which would compare very favorable with the older institutions of the Eastern states. Minnesota is also credited with possessing some of the brightest teachers and educators of the Northwest. Most of them are young and energetic, partaking largely of the spirit and enterprise of the business interests of a state rapidly increasing in wealth. It is to the public schools of the cities and the common schools of the state that the best exhibits must be looked for. Our higher institutions have older and richer colleges and normal schools to compete against, but the public school system has nothing to fear from any of them. It is well known among educators that many of the Eastern teachers in the public schools get many ideas and suggestions from the Western pedagogue. Especially is this true in school architecture and the interior furnishings and comforts of school buildings. The educational exhibit of Minnesota has been directed mainly in the lines of display of actual school work as performed during the sessions of the school. There are also upon exhibition pictures of the different school buildings of the largest cities of the state. There have been, however, but few models placed upon exhibition of any school buildings, although the Minnesota university and Carleton college have placed upon exhibition plans of their curriculum, and drawings of their grounds and buildings, which are attracting a good deal of attention. The classification of school work has been made by the teachers of the schools which are represented in the exhibit. It displays a very close and careful selection of exhibits for the walls of the space allotted to Minnesota. Most of the educational exhibits which I have seen embrace an endless and apparently disconnected wilderness of specimens that lead to confusion and detract much from the effects of really meritorious work. The space given to Minnesota is arranged with six alcoves on each side of a central aisle, upon the walls of which are hung the best specimens of work, while other displays are made in revolving cases and in portfolios. The first thing that strikes the beholder in the display is the preponderance of drawings, models, etc., kindred to the fine arts. These drawings, paintings and models are admitted to be equal and in many instances superior to the same class of work displayed by normal and technical schools in various parts of the liberal art building. There are many instances in which improvement could have been made if more funds had been at the disposal of Prof. F. T. Wilson in charge of Minnesota's educational exhibit. The lack of funds is, of course, noticeably, particularly in the placing and hanging of the display which sometimes suffers on account of its setting.

On one side of the central aisle are booths devoted to sewing and cooking, to wood and metal work, wall paper designs, illustrated botany lessons, illustrated language lessons and map work. On the other side are alcoves devoted to country school exhibits, photographs of public educational institutions, normal school work, Carleton college exhibit and State university exhibit. The college exhibits are yet incomplete and thus far are not up to the standard set by the public schools of Minnesota or that set by other colleges of other states. All the exhibits on the walls are placed under glass except the wood and metal work. The schools of the state which have contributed most to the display are Minneapolis, St. Paul, Duluth, Stillwater and Winona. The Minneapolis exhibit excels in carved and general wood work, in designs for wall paper, in sepia drawing work, in pencil and India ink sketches and in display of sewing work arranged by Miss Susie E. Sirwell, of the Minneapolis public schools. This last mentioned display seems to be a novelty in so far as state educational work is concerned and has no duplicate anywhere in their vicinity in the liberal arts building. The exhibit embraces all kinds of needle work displayed in glass cases, besides specimens of the kind of work required of each pupil during the three years' course. The St. Paul schools have excellent exhibits in water colors, in illustrated language work, in crayon work, in relief map work and in sewing work. They excel the other exhibits in the first two mentioned. Duluth appears to have made a specialty of relief map work and crayon drawing, in which they excel. Winona has upon exhibition a small glass case, in which are specimens of the woods of the state and of the birds of the state, prepared by the pupils of the public schools, which are a credit to their instructors. Minneapolis public schools exhibit a very creditable display of modeling, which is also a novelty in educational training of a public and general nature. The educational displays throughout the building are very backward in their products, but so far as can now be seen the North Star State has nothing to fear from competition.

Agricultural Exhibit.

Minnesota is the banner wheat state of the Union and her exhibit is at once artistic and profuse in variety embodying her great agricultural wealth in miniature arranged so as to give an idea of the great natural beauty of her fertile prairies and rich forest lands. In six years she has raised nearly 300,000,000 bushels of wheat and in one of them she yielded over 60,000,000 bushels. This wheat is, as every Minnesotian knows, the best grown in the world. The design of the exhibit is so made as to utilize a limited space to the fullest degree and for that reason from an outward point of view everything appears crowded. The work of arranging the exhibit has been very slow, owing to the fact that it has been the aim of George Purvis, in charge, to make as artistic a display as possible and to correctly label every specimen of the four hundred individual exhibits of cereals and grasses. In addition to this there is a car load and a half of prepared specimens of grains and grasses secured by Supt. L. P. Hunt, which are also labeled. The exhibit has thus an educational as well as an artistic side. Prof. Luger has loaned also his complete collection, properly and scientifically labeled of grains and grasses. His entomological collection, selected with a view to show the insects which are destructive to the farmers' productions is also on exhibition. The design of the pavilion is based upon the Madaline palace of Paris to some extent, commonly known as "Napoleon's Temple of Glory." It will when completed show five tiers of arches, embodying twenty-six decorative colors, each pillar different in design and decoration, yet harmonizing throughout. The front presents a unique and striking appearance embodying these colossal arches supported by four ornamental pillars, all of which are highly decorated and carved. The center arch is surmounted by a star, which is constructed of wheat and corn, and represents the arms of the state. The outside arches are each surmounted by a large eagle with extended wings, constructed mainly of corn husks. The archways and pillars are embossed and ornamented with grain, leaves and grasses indigenous to Minnesota. The corner pillars have worked upon them in heads of wheat in almost perfect designs representations of the moccasin flower, the flower of the State of Minnesota. Two horns of plenty arranged on each side of the central arch and above it are made also of grains and grasses and have blooming forth from them potted flowers in most beautiful effect. The interior decoration is marvelous, when it is considered that it is all worked out of heads of grain and forage grasses. Daisies, roses, sunflowers, moccasin flowers, flax, verbenas, hibiscus, single and double dahlias, honeysuckles, buttercups, etc., are found in endless profusion, always worked with their proper foliage in and around the pillars and arches.

Between the third tier of arches there is placed what is known as the "Great Northern Tower," a pagoda Saxon design with a clock tower canopied overhead and with pillars supporting it in keeping with the general design of the pavilion. It has sixteen sides, on each of which is a glass case containing a design or picture constructed out of grains and grasses to represent the various agricultural products of the state. This handsome contribution of the Great Northern road will cost, when completed $1,150. The specimens for exhibition are placed on eight double glass fronted cases and in four octagon cones, in which will be shown 800 specimens of grain and grasses. The specimens for competition, owing to the fact that they will have to be examined by the judges on awards are placed in racks. There are also 200 specimens of grain and about 100 specimens of grass seed are entered for competition. There is a display of natural leaf of tobacco gathered from various parts of the state, made by George Mitchelson of St. Paul. The display of corn will surprise many of the old residents of the state. There is an abundance of flax, canary bird seed, etc., which will be given the most advantageous display possible in the collection. The vegetable display will not be made before July. There are six car loads of material used in making the display. Among the collection of wheat which will be upon exhibition are the Erlau wheat, originally introduced from Bohemia by a Minnesota engineer, who plucked a head of wheat from a growing field while traveling in Bohemia. This wheat is very early and healthy and is of a peculiar brown color. The Austrian Klattau wheat is on exhibition, the czar and the Kaisar, also new varieties of wheat. One of the most prolific of the new wheats is Whiting's eighty fold wheat originally grown in the Shoukin valley in Western Montana. It was introduced into Minnesota by General Passenger Agent Whitney, of the Great Northern road. All of these specimens are of the hard variety. Other specimens are the Champion, the Peerless, the improved Saskatchewan and the Kildonan, the latter being a resuscitation of the old Selkirk wheat introduced originally by the Selkirk colony, near Fort Garry. Glass cases will be upon exhibit containing the various soils of the state. The design of the agricultural exhibit was prepared by Mr. Purvis of St. Paul at the request of the Minnesota commission and the chief artist, who has had charge of the decorative work under the commission, is Miss Carrie Purvis, who has also charge of decorative work on the Great Northern column.

The Forestry Exhibit.

The Minnesota forestry exhibit in charge of C. L. Smith of Minneapolis is the most complete in the full sense of the term forrestry of any display from a single state, because it has specimens of the wood in the rough and dressed of every variety of tree grown in Minnesota, numbering in all about eighty-five. The collection also has the leaf, seed and growing sprout of each species as well as specimens in the same manner of every shrub, vine, moss, lichen, etc., indigenous to the state, making in all some two hundred species. The whole collection has a rustic fence around it, every stick and post of which is of a different species of wood. In the center of the exhibit is a rustic arbor to be covered with vines and evergreen shrubs, in which will be exhibited specimens of every animal which frequents forests and makes its home in trees. To the right of the arbor is a small square in which will be constructed a cabin of poplar wood pulp. It will have an extensive dooryard ornamented with diminutive shade trees and numerous trailing vines and evergreens. Mr. Smith has also a large collection of photographs illustrating forest growth of the State of Minnesota which will be placed upon exhibition. There will also be on hand numerous pamphlets setting forth the statistics of forestry of the state, the history of the park system and other facts of interest to all who desire to learn the practical side of forestry. This literature will be given away to all comers. There has been no attempt at fantastic designs or impossible combinations in the display. The aim has been to make everything appear as natural as possible.

The Fisheries Display.

This exhibit is a very modest one conceived at a late date when there was not much money at the disposal of the state managers. Dr. R. O. Sweeney of Duluth, superintendent of the United States fish hatchery at that place was engaged to make as full an exhibit of taxidermist specimens of the game and fish as possible in a brief space of time. He has completed the exhibit at an early date and has made it very comprehensive in so far as specimens are concerned. With more time for better specimens of each fish could have been obtained. For instance it is well known in the northeastern section of Minnesota that the largest specimens of speckled brook trout to be found anywhere may be captured in streams tributary to Lake Superior on the north shore. Minnesota has the most extensive fresh water lake system of any state in the Union and naturally could produce for exhibition very fine specimens of pike, mouskalounge, black perch, wall eyed pike, sturgeon, white fish, etc. Every one has heard of Lake Superior planked whitefish and not a few people have partaken of this great delicacy. All the specimens have been obtained, stuffed and painted and placed upon exhibition by Dr. Sweeney. Minnesota has made no tank exhibit. In addition to this all the game birds of the state as the choice work of the taxidermist have been secured for the Minnesota display. All these exhibits have been arranged around a central booth in glass cases, which is surmounted by two wax figures of Dakota Indians seated in a canoe and engaged in their favorite pastime of fishing. The display is a creditable one and helps well to maintain the belief current that Minnesota is well represented in every building upon the fair grounds.

Minnesota Mines.

The iron mines of the state are confined to a few northeastern counties, but their fame has lately surpassed that of the famous Michigan and Wisconsin mining regions, especially since the cheap iron ore of the Mesaba range has become a reality instead of a theory and has begun to have its marked effects upon the prices of ore on the markets of the East. It is perhaps unfortunate for Minnesota in making a mining exhibit that the counties in which iron deposits occur are practically new and comparatively speaking sparsely settled as a whole. Their demands upon the state for money and their enterprise in making such an exhibit as one might have wished would not naturally obtain the recognition that they would convey from older settled communities. The mining exhibit of iron ore is made almost entirely from St. Louis county, Minnesota, and is in charge of one of the national members of the commission, H. B. Moore of Duluth. He has devoted a great deal of time to the matter. A very handsome archway to the exhibit is constructed out of stone from the various quarries of the state, with the name of each county from which a specimen of stone comes out into a stone of the archway. Two well polished granite Grecian pillars sustaining the archway come from St. Cloud, Minn. The exhibit of iron ore is not made in large quantities. There are specimens of ore from the principal mines of the Mesaba range in small glass cases, each of which has a small label giving the result of analysis in products of iron phosphorus and silicon. There is a pyramid of hard ore from the famous Minnesota mines at Soudan and of soft ore from the Chandler mine at Ely. The most unique object in the exhibit is a complete model of the Chandler mine, giving the various working shafts and the levels, with their timbering, in which the actual work of mining is being performed. This exhibit attracts a good deal of attention. The whole exhibit is surrounded with a neat iron scroll fence built upon stone taken from the various quarries of the state.

The North Dakota Agricultural Exhibit.

North Dakota, in making her agricultural exhibit has bent all her energies to excelling in the excellence and number of varieties of her wheat and forage grasses displayed. Mr. Dickey, in charge, expects to capture the prize on these two exhibits. It is, of course, naturally supposed that the battle will be between North Dakota and Minnesota for these two prizes. Neither of the exhibits of these two states are yet fully complete and it is too early to pass any opinion as to who will probably capture the prize.

The main feature, which first attracts the attention of the observer in looking at the North Dakota exhibit, is the Herculean female figure typical of the state, which stands near the center of the display. The drapery is inlaid with heads of wheat and the head and arms are constructed of wheats and grasses. It is a striking conception and will be likely to call the attention of many to the display who might otherwise pass it by. There is a marked abundance in everything exhibited by North Dakota, while the Minnesota agricultural exhibit is of a light and graceful nature, giving in its main aspects the idea of artful display rather than of gross abundance. It is the work of Ceres rather than the gift of fortune and the pouring out of the horn of plenty. Everywhere about the North Dakota exhibit are appropriate designs setting forth the glory of the state as a wheat producer and presenting statistics of her marvelous growth in the last decade everywhere there is a profusion of heads of animals and other skillful designs worked in wheat and grasses, set off and adorned with wreaths and filaments of the same material. There is apparently no attempt in the exhibit to make a display in lines of agriculture in which other states would be most liable to excel them. The designers of the exhibit believed in expending all their efforts upon displays in which North Dakota had the best chance of winning and in ignoring other lines in which they could have made a creditable exhibit, but not a remarkable one. In addition to the main display in the agricultural building, North Dakota has made a very creditable exhibit in her own state building along the same lines. There are figures of sheep, cattle, horses, birds, etc., in profusion adorning the walls constructed out of natural products. It all conveys the lesson that North Dakota is the coming forage grass and hard wheat state of the Union.

Cliff Dwellers' Exhibit.

One of the most interesting exhibits upon the world's fair grounds is presented in what is known as the "Cliff Dwellers' display." It embraces numberless specimens of ethnological exhibits of the cliff dwellers of America collected by the H. Jay Smith Exploring company. The collection is of priceless value to the scientist and is at the same time of great interest to the sightseer and the curio hunter. The collection was made from the wierd and solitary desert country near the Utah line in the westernmost part of Utah. This was the former camping and fighting ground of the Navajos and Utes and its centermost point of interest is Battle Rock, surrounded with legends and superstitions taking their origin away back in prehistoric times. It is a tangled wilderness of bristling cactus plants and forbidding crags. Stunted pines and desolate sage brush add to the strangeness of the scene, which is indeed haunted holy ground teeming with the dust and the remains of the long forgotten dead. Their spirits still rule our interest from their dismantled works and razed resting places. This display is interesting to Minnesotians, especially, because the explorations and collections were made by H. J. Smith and Alexis J. Fournier, both Minneapolis men. The place of exhibit has been constructed as an exact copy of "Battle Rock" except that it is only one-tenth as large. Inside of the cave you glance through openings and perceive realistic views of the cliff dwellers' country, which are oil paintings 6x12 feet in size done by Mr. Fournier. A museum of the cave contains hundreds of specimens of interest, utensils, mummies, grains and other articles of the races who furnished them. The exhibit will doubtless attract the careful attention of all scientists who visit the Columbian exposition.

Easy as Anything.

The proper way to hold up the flaring skirt is to take a good hold about as far down the back as you can reach without bending. Draw the skirt close up to the side, back of the hip, giving the fullness a sort of flirt to the opposite side that makes all the folds break and divide into a graceful cascade and gives glimpse of the silk lining and ruffling and just a whirl of crisp edge that never divides except to show more of the same kind. Of course, the effect depends entirely upon the adroitness of the flirt and fling you give the folds as you draw the skirt up and to the side. From the front the view is equally graceful. The figure is outlined with glove-like accuracy and the outline is emphasized by the riot of ruffle that swings over one side at the back. The flare about the feet is not interfered with a bit and not an ankle shows.

St Hilaire is about the only village in the county which has not a delegation at Crookston attending court which goes to show that we are a peaceful community.

The timbers for the new railroad bridge at Red Lake Falls came up last Monday and a crew of men are now at work putting it together,

A person signing himself "a victim" writes from Red Lake Falls a would be sarcastic article to the Crookston Times concerning Prof. Gambell's Dramatic troupe which played at Red Lake Falls last week. A careful perusal of the article clearly indicates that the writer was a debauched satelite of some saloon or notorious resort who, thinking that the production of a play like "Ten Nights in a Bar Room" would hurt his chosen occupation, seeks in an underhand way to stab the authors in the back. The author of the article was too cowardly to sign his name but he can hardly be blamed as doers of disreputable deeds always work in the dark.

It is stated that Red Lake Falls, East Grand Forks and McIntosh have held a meeting and will join together in trying to divide Polk county into four parts making Crookston and each of the above named places a county seat, Fortunately we have plenty of time to think it over as the election will not occur until the next general election, In the mean time it would be a good plan for St. Hilaire to unite with Fosston, Fertile and Fisher and go into the county division scheme on its own hook.

St. Paul is making extensive preparations to celebrate the opening of the Great Northern as a transcontinental line, The parade of floats and industries in which the cities of the Northwest and the Pacific coast will take part will be the most imposing affairs ever seen in the Northwest, St. Paul is building arches across the principal streets, and the city will be elaborately decorated. The Great Northern makes a half rate from here to St. Paul and return. Tickets good between June 6th and 11th.

A freight train one mile in length stopped with the caboose just opposite the depot, The conductor got orders move his train to the next station, which was five miles distant. He gave the engineer orders to move, which the latter did, while the conductor walked on the top of the cars and got there just as the engine arrived at the next station where he got off. The question is, how far did he walk, or as he was walking the entire five miles, did he ride at all? —Ex.

A drop of nicotine on a dog's tongue will make the canine death's sausage in just 14 seconds. Yet a man will fill his skin so full of the poison that when he takes a turkish bath, non-smokers have to leave the apartment. Man is made a little lower than the angels, but by such habits as this and by blowing in $1.000,000,000 yearly for booze, the angels are enabled to remain on top in spite of the attempts of a hustling and progressive civilization.—Journal

The outlook for good prices for wheat next fall has materially improved during the last month, In all the winter wheat states the crop is short, and in some not more than 50 per cent of an average yield is anticipated, Shortage in France, and generally throughout Europe will add largely to the demand for the American product. Although it is yet too early to estimate all the factors that will determine prices, notwithstanding the large visible supply in sight, there is at this date good reason for expecting satisfactory figures for the 1893 crop of North Dakota No, 1 hard As to yield, indications were never better for an abundant harvest to reward the labors of the wheat growers. —Grand Forks Daily Herald.

Every year about this time Crookston is honored with a visit from a little Dane blacksmith named Fred Hanson, who, as soon as he strikes the city, proceeds to get drunk and give no end of trouble to the police, Last evening he paid his annual visit but the police were expecting and prepared for him, As soon as he had got sufficiently hilarious as to become noisy he was taken to the coop and this morning was convicted of drunkenness under the Scheffer law and given 60 days in the county jail. This is the third time he has been sentanced under this law and the next time he will have to go to states prison,—Crookston Times.

WHEN THE CIRCUS COMES TO TOWN.

The spring is comin round ag'in, and soon on every tree
You'll hear th' blue birds singin, just as happy as kin be;
The frogs are pipin in th' lane, and on the big board fence
They've paste'd up some lithographs about the circus [illegible]—
Of elephants a-dancin with a funny white faced clown,
And you'd better b'lieve I'm goin
When
the circus
comes
town.

Thar's lots of golden chariots with queens and princesses on 'em
Who've got tired of rulin kingdoms and had rather be with Barnum.
A cage of tawny lions, where a keeper sits in tights
And hits a lion with a whip, but the critter never bites,
For if he even whimpers he can still him with a frown—
And you bet I'll see them lions
When
circus
town.

I ain't no hand for music, but when that circus band
Strikes up with "Annie Rooney," I tell you what, it's grand!
With the elephants a-waltzin and the horses keepin time,
While clean up on the highest pole a spangled boy will climb
And send a chill right up your back to see him dive way down—
And you kin bet that I won't miss it
When
circus
town.

Thar's half a dozen camels and big elephants enuff
To clean this here hull town out if they got to playin rough.
And kangaroos and zebras, and a big long necked giraffe,
And a cage of funny monkeys, 'nuff to make the parson laugh.
I'm a-savin up some money, and as sure as my name's Brown
I'll spend a half a dollar
When
circus

Pretty Fair Hand.

There's a very pious and diffident young man in Detroit who is so very sensitive that a certain gentleman with a good looking daughter has for years been teasing him on all sorts of subjects, and the young fellow has never been able to get even until now. The other day the old one met the young one in a crowd of men.

"Ah, my boy," he said, "you weren't at the club last night?"

"No, sir," was the response, "I was making a few calls."

"O-ho," laughed the old one, with great significance, "making calls, were you? What kind of hands did you hold?" and he winked and laughed again and nudged the young man in the ribs.

Then the inspiration came to the young man.

"They were just too lovely for anything," he said, with a smile. "Your daughter's was one, for instance." And somehow the old one hasn't felt so much like teasing the pious young man since that.—Detroit Free Press.

Didn't Want Them.

Mr. Billus was looking over the plans of a new barn he was preparing to build.

"I don't care about having any windows on the side facing the kitchen yard," he said.

"But you will need them for light," replied the architect.

"Light nothing!" roared Mr. Billus. "Those windows call for 64 panes of glass, and I've got a boy 8 years old! Leave 'em out!"—Chicago Tribune.

She Could Trust Him.

Mother—I wish you to go to the store and get me a bar of soap.

Little Johnny—I've got a awful toothache.

"Does it really ache much?"

"Awful! I can't let a thing touch it!"

"Then you may also bring a pound of raisins."—Good News.

A Friend In Need.

Mr. Sadly—Yes, the grief I feel over the loss of my mother drives me across the water. I will never return.

Mr. Chumley—Never return? Are you sure of that?

"No, you will never see me again."

"Say, lend me $5 until you get back."—Texas Siftings.

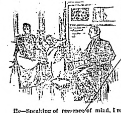
Decidedly Unsophisticated.

Jack—That little girl I'm in love with now is a perfect little wild flower, fresh as a daisy. Why, she's never even been waltzed with.

George—Well, well!

Jack—That's true. Never been anything but engaged a few times.—New York Weekly.

Explained.



He—Speaking of presence of mind, I remember being in a panic once when I lost my wits completely.

She—Oh, was that the way?—Scribner's Magazine.

A Dilemma.

Cora—Mrs. Bacon's parlor is furnished beautifully, but there isn't a chair in the room.

Clara—For gracious sakes! Where in the world does she go when some one says "rats!"—Yonkers Statesman.

Getting a Home.

She—So she married that baldheaded old scamp! Why, I heard he had been blackballed at every club in town.

He—That's why he married—for a home. —Life.

No Wonder.

Totling—Young Goslin declares he never will associate with an inferior.

Dimling—That's a wise resolution on his part. He'd find it impossible.—Vogue.

He Was Right.

The story of the rich man's selling all he had and giving it to the poor was the subject of discussion in a certain Sunday school class not long ago. The teacher was illustrating the moral that the lesson conveys. One of her most attentive listeners was a little fellow scarcely 6 years old, but as bright as a dollar and with a tongue that uses the queen's English in a manner that would make that motherly old soul squirm if she heard it. "Now," said the teacher very impressively, "if a man is fortunate enough to make $1,000,000 in the course of his life, it is his duty to give half of it at least to the poor." "Yes," interrupted a prim little girl in one corner, "but how many men make $1,000,000 in the course of their lives?" There was a silence for a moment, when the little fellow chirped in with the caustic answer, "Darn few."—Utica Observer.

Not Interesting to Her.

Husband—You have been worrying me for five years because you were not as well dressed as Mrs. Nexdoor.

Wife—Well?

"Well, he's failed—can't pay his debts."

"Did he owe you anything?"

"No."

"Humph! I can't see what that has to do with my clothes."—Exchange.

Where They Sit.

Mother—Don't you know better than to put your feet on the sofa? Look at the mud. Suppose some one should come in and sit down on it?

Small Son—This is the night Mr. Nicefello comes to see sis, and they never sit on the sofa. They always sits on the rocking chair.—Good News.

Anything to Oblige.

Fortune Teller—Let me read your fortune, lady. I can find out your future husband.

Lady—I already have a husband.

Fortune Teller—If you'd like to have him found out, can do that too.—Indianapolis Journal.

Dangerous.

Tom—How is it you don't call on Miss Flip any more?

Jack—She recently bought her little brother a kodak.—Vogue.

Not an Applicant.

Mrs. Degood—Did you know that satan finds work for idle hands to do?

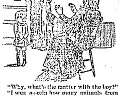
Dusty Rhodes—I don't want to do no work. See?—Truth.

Too Late.

He (passionately)—My love, Geraldine, is like the rose in your hair. It is—

She—Artificial.—Tit-Bits.

A Sad Tale.



"Why, what's the matter with the boy?"

"I wuz a-seein how many animals from my Noah's ark I could hold in my mout', an I've been an swallered a giraffe an a zebra!"—Life.

FASHION'S DECREES.

Fringes are largely imported in jet, gold, lined crystal, iridescent, garnet and bronze beads.

A new and very shaggy make of cheviot is among the fashionable fabrics for winter traveling costumes, coats and long cloaks.

The newest dress skirts are of the much gored umbrella shape, and some of them have an astonishing "flare" around the lower portion.

With the short waisted empire gowns should always be worn the very short, low French corset, which is merely a support, without at all confining the waist.

Shirt trimmings are everywhere visible, but they are seldom wide. Puffings, plaitings, ruches, tiny frills, fur and feather bands abound, and sometimes on very elegant costumes the slender fur border is headed by a rich bead and metal passementerie.

Feather turbans are again shown with low crowns, plain or indented, the brims close and rolling, the shape long and oval oftener than round, and the whole made of tips of pheasants' or doves' feathers, with aigrettes in front of the same plumage, thickly massed.—New York Evening Post.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES.

Leather is now a favorite medium for silver ornament.

The working out of designs in colored stones is becoming a new art.

Long trident shaped forks without ornament have a good deal of distinction.

Sponge cups of silver for bank tellers and sealing letters are a pretty trifle in view of Christmas.

A spoon for sardines and smelts has a flat bowl of three gold fishes. The handle is made of strips of seaweed.

New letter scales have a circular dial plate on an oblong pedestal. This is a more convenient form than the columnar scale.

There is charming variety in back combs. The handsomest of course have the pierced gold mountings. But these are carried into the shell in numbers of graceful forms.

Fine enameled ornament increases. In brooches the structure is in some strongly defined form, such as a star, cross, triangle or square of stones. These are all united in a round brooch by filling up the interstices with this fine enameled and perforated tracery.—Jewelers' Circular.

A Teetotaler's Intention if the Ship Went Down.

"I came over from England on the Umbria the time she broke her shaft," said the tall man in the Mackintosh, and there was a funny thing the day after the accident."

"Tell us, commanded his companions.

"There was an Englishman on board who was very much worried, apparently about the safety of the ship. Early in the morning he hunted up the captain and said: 'Excuse me, captain, but is hall 'opes over?'

"'Why, no,' said the captain, 'we're all right. We'll get through in good shape.'

"The Englisman appeared satisfied and walked away. Half an hour later he hunted the captain up again and said: "Excuse me, captain, but is hall 'opes over now?"

"No, no," said the captain, "there's no danger."

"The Englisman went away again. Half an hour later he came back and asked the question. He kept it up at regular intervals all day. Finally, along about 6 o'clock, the captain got mad, and, when the Englishman came up with his question he grabbed him by the collar and shouted: 'See, here, you dod-blamed idiot! What do you mean by asking me that fool question so many times?'

"Why, captain," stammered the cockney. "Hi didn't mean no 'arm. Hi was merely hinquiring because Hi'm a teetotaler hand hif hall 'opes was hover Hi hintended getting blind drunk."—Buffalo Express.

America Turns Its Back on Anglo-Saxon Tradition.

If we accept the definition of the Russian penal code, a revolutionary conspiracy, of any kind is, constructively, an attempt upon the life of the Tsar, and, as such, is punishable with death. Is the government of the United States prepared to admit that a political conspiracy which may threaten the Tsar's life is, in fact, an attempt upon his life so direct as to deprive the conspirator of the right of asylum in the United States under the pending treaty? If we are to accept the Russian law as our guide we must be prepared to surrender all Russian refugees who have conspired against the Tsar's government and who have undertaken to overthrow it by violent means. In making such surrenders, however, we shall do for the support and encouragement of tyranny what the government of Great Britain has always refused to do, and shall turn our backs upon the history and the traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race.—George Kennan in Forum.

COMPARATIVELY A NEW OCEAN.

The Pacific Regard as a Spanish Lake Until About a Century Ago.

It seems rather curious to recall the fact that very little more than 100 years ago the Pacific was regarded as a Spanish lake, says the Washington Star. That nation claimed it on the strength of Balboa's discovery in 1513, and insisted that it should be regarded as a mere clausum. When Sir Francis Drake circumnavigated the globe his sailing across these waters was seriously resented by Spain, which demanded restitution to her of the plunder he took, but Queen Elizabeth made a haughty reply. Not long before the close of the last century the Spanish crown again began to make a fuss because its monopoly of the Pacific was infringed on. It ordered the commandante of San Francisco to seize the Columbia, the first vessel that carried the American flag around Cape Horn. In 1789 two Spanish men-of-war seized several English fur traders on the northwest coast and war was very nearly the result. It is odd that the Spaniards, though discoverers of new lands and waters, were among the poorest navigators of their time. After coming upon the Solomon islands they could not find them again, and they were lost for 150 years. The water supply of their galleons was not kept in casks, but in big earthen jars. As it was impossible to provide a sufficient supply for a six months' voyage on board of a ship carrying 400 or 500 people they always took to sea great numbers of mats. Whenever it rained the mats were spread to catch the drops, which were drained off into jars through split bamboos. The mortality from scurvy on long trips was frightful.

Cortes, after the conquest of Mexico, fitted out three small ships to sail to the Moluccas and reinforce the Spaniards there. They were scattered by a tempest and two of them were lost. One of these is imagined to have been the strange vessel which was wrecked on the rocks of Hawaii about the same time as nearly as can be reckoned. According to tradition only the captain and his sister were saved. The natives received them kindly and gave them food. They intermarried with the Hawaiians and became the progenitors of certain well known families of chiefs. In early times the control of land on the Hawaiian islands was held by the ruling chiefs, who reserved what portion they pleased for their own use and divided the rest among the leading men subject to them. The position of the latter was analogous to that of the barons of European feudalism. They furnished supplies to their sovereign and in case of war were expected to take the field with what fighting men their estates could furnish. These barons held almost despotic sway over their domains, apportioning the territory which they controlled among the followers according to the whim of the moment or demand of policy. Every time a new chief came into power there was a fresh distribution of lands. Thus the country was always full of people who were dispossessed and homeless. Kamechameha III. overturned this system by granting to his people a bill of rights which made their tenure of the soil permanent.

AN UGLY SHIPMATE.

The Giraffe Is Not a Pleasant Companion on a Steamer.

Only the young of the giraffe could be rendered sufficiently tractable to be brought within reach of shipboard. I do not think it possible that a mature specimen could ever be made sufficiently amenable to discipline. These timid animals have in the wild state an abiding terror of mankind, and even if, as sometimes happens, a giraffe were run to a standstill and driven up to the wagon, no amount of kind treatment could overcome his instinctive fears. They are, of course, too huge and too awkward to be easily handled in the wild state, even if lamed, or hobbled or fastened up; and, moreover, they have a dangerous way of striking out with the fore legs, a defensive habit which in itself would render them formidable.

With the young, on the contrary, no great trouble seems to have been experienced in the few instances in which they have been caught and brought to Europe.

But if giraffes are to be thus captured in accessible Africa, no time will have to be lost. Year by year, even in Khama's wild domains, they grow fewer and more difficult to get at; and after Khama's death the giraffe, which he may now almost be said to preserve, will soon be exterminated south of the Zambesi.—English Exchange.

RESURRECTION.

Some wounds, first deep, are deeper every year,
Although our eyes no longer fill and weep,
Or watch no more at night when others sleep,
And find not, like new grief, the ready tear;
No transient solace touches such wounds here;
No other hearts can know the anguish deep
Of hearts that higher hearts in memory keep—
Time passes but to show their loss more clear;
The way is weary and the wall is thick
That keeps us from the waiting souls beyond;
Ah, sages, poets, have you not, too, lied
Unto our fancies that are faint and sick?
For answer, clasp one truth, no dream-phase fond,
One man came up from hell—the Crucified.

—Maurice Francis Egan in The Independent.

"FOR LOVE IS LOVE."

"I know it is presumption, folly, madness; and I meant to hide it forever in my own bosom. In the grief of leaving you, my beautiful one, and perhaps for another, the wild words were forced from my lips. I will not even ask you to pardon me, Gladys—Miss Van Cleve."

Robert Trevor had never looked so royally handsome, so manly, so worthy a woman's best love, as he looked while uttering that forlorn speech.

What a noble soul shone from those earnest, sea-blue eyes. What a proud consciousness of his strength to suffer for love and for the loved ones was revealed in every line of his frank young face. What generous tenderness, what knightly loyalty breathed in every inflection of his musicad bass voice.

And was Gladys van Cleve displeased by his confession of love?—by what he, in his lover's humility, acknowledged to be presumption?

Was the banker's petted, only daughter, reared in affluence, a young social queen, was she offended by such an avowel from an unknown inventor, who, a few years before, had been an errand boy in her father's office, and who might never attain success and riches by his chosen vocation?

Her father had always appeared to like him in a sort of patronizing way, and had not infrequently invited him to the house.

She had dressed to-night for a grand charity ball, and she had come down to the drawing-room only a moment before he was ushered into it.

In her elegant gown of opal-tinted silk, with its lace-shrouded bodice and jeweled girdle, she sat erect and statue-like, and listened with a silence which seemed to him like a deliberate rebuff.

Her large fan of white feathers was slightly uplifted, screening her delicately flushed cheeks and tremulous lips, and above it her topaz-tinted eyes were hidden by her straight and wonderfully long lashes.

When young Trevor again spoke, after a long pause, his impassioned and thrilling voice was instinct with the dignity of a noble manhood, and yet it held a patient humility which would have stirred a colder, harder heart than that of the fair girl before him.

"I do not blame you for rebuking me, my beautiful queen," said he; "for I entirely realize the difference between us, and I have never been vain enough to imagine that you could care for me. You can no more help your pride, your dainty tastes, and your abhorence of inferior associations and surroundings, than you can help your complexion being like rose-petals or your hair being like the gold of ripe wheat. I am a poor man, and my forefathers were poor before me; and it may be long years before I can accumulate enough of this world's goods to make a home for a wife. And, my adored one, I love you so truly and so absolutely that I am almost glad for your own sake you have not learned to give me back affection for affection."

His abnegation of self was sublime; but he was only human, and for a moment he was compelled to cease and turn away lest she should detect the sudden failure of his strength and courage.

He hoped to spare her, if possible, the pain of knowing how he suffered.

There was a nervous motion of the fan, which reminded the unhappy young fellow of a sacred bird unfurling its wings for flight.

For an instant he thought Gladys was about to make some response; but she did not.

Was she so angry, then? Did she scorn him so absolutely that his declaration of love seemed to her like an insult?

Trevor's handsome young face almost seemed to turn aged and haggard as he looked at her.

To the last breath of life that startling look of mortal despair would haunt the memory of Gladys van Cleve.

But in an instant he had controlled himself.

"We are not likely to meet again in this world," he said more calmly at length. "I am sorry for having pained you by betraying my folly. Try to remember me without anger, my adored one. I know it would be impossible to ever gain the priceless treasure of your affection; but I dare hope that you will think of me kindly in the years before us. And I shall pray that this moment of madness may never be a cloud upon your memory of me. Farewell, my heart's idol, beautiful bride of my dreams. Farewell forever!"

While speaking he had been moving away from her. But it was with lingering reluctance; and in her overwhelming agitation she had not noticed it.

The abrupt opening and closing of the door startled her. The fan dropped from her fingers unheeded. The long lashes flared upward, and her topaz-tinted eyes dilated; while her flushed cheeks turned deadly white.

He was gone. She had let him go, believing that she was angry and unfeeling.

"Robert, oh, Robert! come back to me," she cried wildly, as she started across the dining-room with her hands outstretched.

But before she reached the hall the outer door of the vestubule clanged shut, and there was a sound of heavy footsteps receding farther and farther away down the granite pavement.

He was gone—gone beyond recall! While she was hesitating between love and pride, between the old worldly teachings and a new and truer knowledge—she had let the crown and glory of her life slip from her grasp.

"What have I done? Dear heaven, what have I done? And I loved him so! There is none other like him, so noble, so true, so grand in his unselfishness. And he said it was farewell forever—that we should never meet again on earth! And I let him go—ah, heaven! I was mad," she cried, as she wrung her hands in an agony of regret, and wept the bitter, smarting tears of despair.

The long days rolled away, each one more hopeless and heart-sick than the one before it; the weeks merged into months, and the months into years; but during all this time she never saw Robert Trevor, never heard from him.

Meantime those years had wrought some melancholy and singular changes for Gladys van Cleve.

Her father had inherited the great bulk of his wealth from a remote relative, whose only son was believed to have perished in a shipwreck. But it happened that the son still lived, and after a time appeared to claim and to recover the estate. In refunding the property Mr. van Cleve nearly beggared himself. He invested the few thousand dollars remaining in a business venture, which proved peculiarly disastrous, and died a little later broken-hearted, leaving his family in absolute want.

The petted favorite, the courted young queen of society, became the tenant of a third-rate flat, with two helpless young brothers, and with a mother who was incapable of anything except repining.

"I am sure," the latter complained plaintively one morning, "I am sure we have sunk low enough without your degrading yourself by doing typewriting in such a dreadfully grimy place as the Vulcan building."

"Somebody must be bread-winner, mamma," Gladys replied. "And I am not yet an employe in the Vulcan building—perhaps they will not engage me."

"Well, I shall be very thankful if somebody discourages you in such shocking notions," the old lady sighed pathetically.

To which Gladys was respectfully silent. To urge the necessity of her action would only precipitate a storm of frivolous lamentations and senseless reproaches.

She fastened a sober gauze veil over the neat little bonnet, constructed by her own clever fingers from the discarded fragments of a Parisian headgear which she had worn in her days of affluence. Then she buttoned her simple cloth cloak over her plain gown—a gown which was now dyed black, but which had once been a marvelous silken creation of opalescent sheen, shrouded with priceless lace, and girdled by precious stones!

Would she never forget the night she first wore that costly ball dress? Would she forever be haunted by the memory of Robert Trevor's stricken look as he turned and left her alone with her pride and her false gods?

Would she ever outlive that dull sense of desolation which oppressed her unceasingly, whether in crowds or in solitude, whether in the dreary night or in the burdensome day?

The olden days recurred to her with unnerving vividness as she started that morning on her long, stormy walk to the Vulcan building.

Robert Trevor, with his martyr-like countenance as she last beheld him, seemed near her like an actual presence.

"And yet," she sighed, "we are separated by thousands of miles, no doubt. I shall never see him, never hear his voice again in this life. But because I spurned him so cruelly, I am punished by these haunting fancies and yearnings."

Even when she reached her destination she could not force these clamoring memories into entire abeyance.

The Vulcan building was an immense new structure of iron and granite, all the rear part of which was filled with the rattle and roar of machinery.

"But I think you will not be required to work in the building. It is up at Bob Trevor's house where the typewriter is wanted," explained one of the clerks in the large, busy office.

"Bob—Robert Trevor?" Gladys repeated, almost unconsciously.

She could feel the blood receding from her face, while her whole frame turned cold, and her limbs shook beneath her.

"Robert Trevor is the owner of the works," said the clerk, who was a merry-looking youth of perhaps sixteen. "He was a poor chap himself only a few years ago. He made a million or so in inventing the things which are manufactured here. He built this place, too."

Gladys had not noticed an elegantly-attired young lady who had alighted from a coach before the entrance, and who had entered the office just behind her.

This lady now approached the young clerk's window.

"My husband engaged a typewriter this morning," she said, with a haughty pretense of not observing the girl's presence. "He asked me to call and inform you, so you need not send any applicant to the house."

With a single comprehensive glance, Gladys noted every detail of the young aldy's appearance—the handsome features which seemed as hard and cold as if carved from stone; the pale, steely eyes; the thin, scarlet lips, the conspicuous elegance of attire, and that peculiar, and almost aggressive, assurance of air which characterizes persons who possess great wealth without good breeding.

"Her husband," Gladys repeated, mentally. "So she is Robert Trevor's wife. She is the sort of woman who has gained the noble heart upon which I trampled in my madness."

She turned and walked slowly out of the office. Her brain whirled; her steps were unsteady; and she put her hands forth like one groping through darkness.

There was a short flight of steps, wide and half-winding, which descended from the office door to the street.

How it happened she never knew, but half-way down these steps, the girl suddenly felt herself falling. She grasped at the railing, which seemed to elude her in some shadowy, unsubstantial manner; a nervous, incoherent cry issued from her tremulous lips, and then all was oblivion.

A gentleman who had just started to ascend the steps heard that faint cry and saw her as she tottered forward. With a wondering, incredulous exclamation he sprung toward her and caught the falling figure in his outstretched arms.

"Gladys, oh, Gladys! Ah, Heaven, how changed she is! What does it mean?" he murmured as he carefully conveyed his senseless burden up the steps and into a private office which opened on the landing beside the counting-room.

He placed her in his big leather chair and as he did so the great topaz-tinted eyes opened consciously and looked into his own with a startled glance.

"I fainted, I suppose, and you brought me here," said she, trying to speak with cold dignity.

He explained that he was coming up the steps as she fell, and that he had brought her there because it was quieter than in the counting-room. His voice held all the gentle courtesy and unselfish tenderness which had once been so sort to her—which was sweet and thrilling still!

"Your wife is in the counting-room," Gladys replied abruptly, and with a bitterness she could not have repressed had it been to save her life.

"My wife?" he ejaculated in unassumed astonishment at her remark. "I have no wife, Gladys. Only one woman lives, only one woman ever has lived who could be wife of mine. I presume the lady to whom you refer is my secretary's wife; she had called very likely on some errand connected with his advertisement for a typewriter."

Gladys had arisen from her chair and was moving impatiently toward the door.

"That was my errand here also," she said in a voice still harsh and bitter. "I hoped to secure the place; but an applicant has been chosen. I need not detain you, Mr. Trevor; and I thank you for your kindness."

"Gladys! oh, Gladys! do not go. Listen to me one moment," he cried as he hurried after her, all his great, imperishable love shining now in his handsome eyes.

She half-turned, her face as white as death. She was too unnerved to struggle against his stronger will, against her own heart. But her pride was not all conquered.

"Don't, Robert! I can't bear it!" she said piteously as she put forth both hands as if to keep him back.

He did not heed the gesture. Instead, he caught both the unwilling hands boldly in his own.

"Why are you so cruel to me—to yourself?" he pleaded. "I have known about your reverses, my darling, and my heart has grieved for you and hungered for you always. Love is love, Gladys, and I shall never cease to adore you until I cease to live. Be my wife, my beautiful one, and let me provide for your dear ones. Can you not care for me a little, sweet?"

"A little! Oh, Robert, if you only knew how unhappy I have been ever since that miserable night!" she cried, with sudden, passionate scorn of herself, and with a burst of tears.

He drew her back gently to the leathern chair, placed her tenderly within it, and stood quietly beside her while he softly stroked her beautiful hair and thus waited.

Sympathy, ineffable tenderness, and reverent worship were all combined in that courteous silence and gentle caress.

Presently Gladys turned with a shy, grateful impulse. She put her graceful arms timidly about his neck, drew his handsome head a little lower, and kissed him on the forehead.

"I am unworthy your noble heart, Robert," she said, earnestly.

"I cannot permit you to say that, my beautiful queen," he answered, with his lips on hers, "for you are the better, dearer part of my life; and I, sweetheart, am the happiest man on this round earth. Ah! love is love, after all; it conquers all else in the end, even the power of pride, and I felt that it would guide you some time to my arms."

WHEN A MAN HAS TO "GRAB A ROOT."

According to an Irish Soldier It Is When He Is Sure Enough Drunk.

"What kind of liquor did he drink?"

"Whisky, sorr; nothin' in it," said the witness.

"Whisky!" exclaimed the astonished officer. "For three hours you observed the prisoner drinking whisky at intervals of twelve minutes apart and yet you have the temerity to say to this court martial that he did not become intoxicated?"

"Ah, shure, Major, it was sutler's whisky."

"No levity, sir!" thundered the major. "Do you know, sir, when a man is intoxicated?"

"Av coorse Oi do."

"Then, according to your opinion, in what condition must a man be to be considered intoxicated?"

"Shure, whin he's loaded, sorr."

"Tut, tut!" testily ejaculated the Major. "What I want to know is what the condition of a man must be, his balance of mind, his condition as to usefulness or helplessness, his ability to walk or talk, his ——"

"O, well that depinds," interrupted Private Gunn.

"Depends on what?" excitedly cried the Major.

"On what ye moight consither bein' dhrunk," calmly responded the witness.

"That's exactly what I am laboring to ascertain," said the Major, as he gazed at the ceiling vainly trying to recover his composure. "When do you consider a man intoxicated, or full, as you term it? Give us your unhindered ideas on the subject?"

"Faith, Oi will, Major," slowly responded the witness, and after lowering his head and stealing his furtive glance at his "bunky," he raised his eyes and said: "As Oi obsurved befoor, Major, it depinds intoirly on wan's own ideas. For mesilf Oi don't think a man can be called downright dhrunk till he topples over an' has to grab a root to kape from fallin' off the earth."

Had the flagstaff fallen on the military justice shop it would not have created more consternation than this parting shot fired by Private Gunn. But offended pride soon reeled and tottered.

Well preserved chunks of that laugh are yet lodged in the crevices of the plaster-cracked walls of the court room at old Fort Yuma, and whoever visits the post is not permitted to depart without learning the origin of the by-gone saying: "Grab a root!"

The phrase was adopted as a byword throughout the garrison, and its popularity became widespread, but it did not save Private Schute. That warrior was found guilty and got "five and ten," which is an abbreviated and familiar way the boys have of expressing the sentence, which reads as follows: "And the court does therefore sentence him, Private Shute, Company B, —th infantry, to forfeit to the United States five dollars ($5) of his monthly pay and to be confined at hard labor under charge of the post guard for the period of ten (10) days."—Exchange.

A Good Way to Drive Out Rats.

A young son of a man living in the outskirts of Portland caught a squirrel the other day and started in to tame the rodent, and he had such success that the squirrel is now as tame as any house cat. A few days ago the squirrel dodged into a rat hole and began running through the walls. The house has been overrun with rats, and after the squirrel got into the walls there was a scampering and racket that threatened to tear the house down. The squirrel came out after a while, and from that time nothing has been heard of rats in the house. The squirrel enjoys a scamper through the walls every day, but the rats have taken themselves off. —Portland (Me.) Express.

It Reached the Ground.

Years ago a naval academy cadet with very short legs used to answer the gibes of his fellow students by saying he didn't care—his legs were long enough to reach the ground. If any one's leg could fail of such an achievement, this story might not have been found in the New York Ledger.

Host (a trifle nervous about the effect of his guest's wooden leg upon the polished floor)—Hadn't you better come on the rug, major? You might slip out there, my boy.

The Major—Oh. don't be afraid, my boy. There is no danger. I have a nail in the end of it.

Made an Impression.

Mother—That's young Mr. Bullion. I think Dora has made an impression on him.

Little Johnny—Yes, indeed; there's a big, white place on his shoulder.

Health in Yawning.

"Not only is it very healthy to yawn," says a French physician, "but artificial yawning should be resorted to in cases of sore throat, buzzing of the ears, catarrh, and like troubles." It is said to be as efficacious in its way as gargling the throat, with which process it should be combined. The reason stated is that during the act of yawning there is considerable stretching of the muscles of the larynx and soft palate, which are in this way put through a sort of massage; besides this, in the act of yawning, the throat tubes contract and drive into the pharynx the mucus that has accumulated.

TRADE WITH CANADA

THE GREAT RECIPROCITY CONVENTION OPENS.

Prominent Men From All Parts of the United States and Canada and of All Political Parties Present at the Gathering.

St. Paul, June 6.—The second great convention in favor of establishing closer trade relations with Canada opened at the auditorium yesterday, and a more distinguished group of business men than those gathered in the great hall it would be hard to find anywhere. They represent the pushing, energetic communities of the Northwest, and are among the leaders in the many enterprises which are being constantly undertaken for the advancement of the business and social interests of the section in which they reside. There is no politics whatever in the convention. Every effort has been made to prevent politics becoming mixed up in the affair on either side of the line. Prominent men from all political parties, both in this country and in Canada, will participate in the deliberations of the convention and deliver addresses. When rock-ribbed Democrats like P. H. Kelly and W. M. Springer join hands with such stalwart Republicans as Gov. Burke, Mayor Wright and others on an issue of this kind, it is very evident that there is no politics in it.

When the delegates entered the auditorium they found it magnificently decorated from the floor to the dome, and all agreed that a pleasanter or more convenient place of meeting could not have been provided. Hon. P. H. Kelly opened the convention with a brief address congratulating the delegates upon the success the movement had thus far attained, as evidenced by the large attendance and the enthusiasm displayed on both sides of the line. He was followed by Mayor Wright, who welcomed the delegates on behalf of the city, after which ex-Gov. Burke welcomed them on behalf of the organization.

When Gov. Burke had finished speaking, James Fisher, M. P., of Winnipeg, was called upon to address the convention in behalf of the Canadian delegates. His remarks were brief but appropriate.

The convention then proceeded to form a temporary organization, and elected Mayor W. H. Eustis of Minneapolis, temporary chairman.

After a number of interesting speeches a committee was appointed to prepare a list of permanent officers. The convention then adjourned for the day. The committee has chosen James Fisher of Winnipeg, president, and P. H. Kelly of St. Paul, vice president.

Kansas City, June 6.—The Kansas Grain and Land company, with general offices at Hutchinson, Kan., has failed. No statement of liabilities or assets has been given out, but it is believed the failure is a heavy one. The failure is probably due to the fact that their customers were long, almost without exception, and could not respond to calls for additional margins. The company has been the leading one in the West, conservatively managed and with such good credit that in ordinary times it could have secured all the money it wanted. The company operated about 100 elevators along the line of the Santa Fe road throughout Kansas.

CLOSED ITS DOORS.

Sandusky, Ohio, June 6.—The Sandusky Savings bank closed its doors yesterday and posted the following notice: "Owing to its inability to realize upon its securities this bank has been compelled to make an assignment for the benefit of its creditors. The depositors will be paid in full without loss to any one."

CADETS FOR CHICAGO.

Washington, June 6.—The war department has decided to send the entire corps of cadets from West Point to Chicago so that the regular army will have a creditable though small representation at the world's fair, notwithstanding the failure of the efforts to secure a grand military encampment there. The cadets will not go until the middle of August. All the details of the trip have not yet been arranged, but it is expected that the cadet corps will remain in Chicago for ten days or two weeks.

WANT THEIR MONEY.

Chicago, June 6.—The State Bank of Commerce, having offices on the ground floor of the Woman's Christian Temperance temple, experienced a heavy run yesterday. It started just before noon with the appearance of some thirty or forty depositors. The news spread like wild fire and within half an hour the lobby was filled with an excited crowd of men and women who crushed and pushed in order to get within the glass doors. A run also started on the Dime Savings bank. This institution has deposits aggregating $600,000.

BOYCOTT THE FAIR.

Pittsburg, June 6.—At the Methodist Episcopal ministerial meeting to-day the ministers were up in arms against the world's fair Sunday opening. Rev. Mr. Brown proposed a resolution, which was unanimously carried, protesting against the desecration, and urging that the Methodist church exhibit of books, educational and literary, from the book room in New York, should be withdrawn, and pledged themselves to stay away from the fair and use their influence to keep all good Methodists away also.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Philipsburg, N. J., June 6.—A landslide occurred at the soapstone quarry at Mount Werne, a mile north of here. George Beltell and John Cole were crushed to death.

DROWNED IN THE RIVER.

Lyons, Iowa, June 6.—An adopted son of Miss Maggie Barry was drowned in the river. His body has been recovered. He was a bright young lad, about fourteen years old.

HARD RECORD TO BEAT.

Fergus Falls, June 6.—This city holds, without doubt, the record for rapid marrying and quick divorcing. About a year ago H. F. Heitsch, Sr., was married, and in a few months his wife sued for divorce on the grounds of cruel and inhuman treatment. Judge Baxter granted her a divorce and gave her a large share of the property as alimony. This was a new idea to Heitsch, and one which did not strike him favorably, so he proceeded to marry his wife again in order tog et back his property. She yielded, and the day after the decree was filed the Heitsches were remarried. They then tried to beat the attorneys out of the fees for divorcing them, but failed. The past week Heitsch got drunk and pounded his wife, for which he was sent to jail. While there his wife served the papers on him for another divorce on the same grounds and Judge Baxter will again be called upon to free her.

CATTLE INDUSTRY.

Chamberlain, S. D., June 6.—W. H. Glecker, who is well versed in the cattle industry on the ceded Sioux lands, confidently predicts that 1,000 car loads of cattle will be shipped from the Sioux ranges during the present season. At present prices this would mean about $1,000,000 for the season's shipments. And this does not include the large shipments which will be made from the Black Hills region, which go East via the Elkhorn road in Nebraska.

SCORES THE ASSEMBLY.

New York, June 6.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Abbott in his sermon on the Briggs case, at Plymouth church, Brooklyn, endeavored to prove that Dr. Briggs, and not the general assembly during the last two years, had defended the true Christian faith; that it was not Dr. Briggs that was heretical, but that the stand taken by the general assembly was one whose logical result was infidelity.

TO VOSIT IRELAND.

Chicago, June 6.—The date of Monsignor Satolli's visit to the Northwest as the guest of Archbishop Ireland has been definitely decided upon. The archbishop and the monsignor dined together here yesterday and in the evening Archbishop Ireland assisted at a banquet tendered Monsignor Satolli by the Italian Catholics of Chicago. The talented papal ablegate will return to Washington from Chicago, and on June 19 will leave Washington for St. Paul, arriving at the Saintly City not later than the 22d. Here he will rest, as Archbishop Ireland terms it, for a period of about two weeks. A trip to the Pacific coast will be made afterward.

South Dakota: For Pierre National Bank of Pierre, Hanover National Bank of New York; for First National Bank if Pierre, First National Bank of New York.

STRANGE CASE.

Burlington, Iowa, June 6.—Burlington police are mystified by the strange case of Miss Lulu Newton, a Des Moines girl who disappeared from her home some time ago and was not heard from until her sisters, Mrs. Jennie Ross and Mrs. Nettie Kennedy of that city received a soiled bit of paper from her, dated Burlington, Iowa, imploring them to come to her rescue before it is too late. The sisters are here, but can get no trace of the girl.

BEGIN WORK.

Bayfield, Wis., June 6.—The contract for the clearing of the right of way of the first section of the Bayfield Harbor & Great Western railway was let on Saturday to John Lambert and he will get at work with a gang of men to-day. The timber on the right of way will furnish a considerable amount of the material for ties, culverts and telegraph poles, and it is supposed that the contracts for the remainder of the work will be let at once.

LOOKING FOR SCHAFFNER.

Chicago, June 6.—The friends of the missing banker, Herman Schaffner, today procured the services of a professional diver who spent all the afternoon in walking on the bottom of the lake a mile or two from shore, but the work was unproductive of results. Further evidence was adduced to-day showing that Schaffner was seen on a car bound for Lincoln Park, which strengthens the theory that he went to the lake front and drowned himself.

DENY IT.

Rome, June 6.—The journals recognized as organs of the Vatican concur in denying that the pope has modified the scholastic policy heretofore enunciated in regard to the United States.

ASKED TO RESIGN.

Washington, June 6.—P. J. McCabe, an immigrant inspector under the treasury department from Minnesota, has been asked to resign.

COMBINES MUST GO.

OPENING OF THE ANTI-TRUST CONVENTION.

Gov. Nelson of Minnesota Delivers an Able Address in Opening the Convention and Is Elected the Permanent Presiding Officer.

Chicago, June 6.—The anti-trust convention met at Apollo music hall yesterday. The convention was called by Gov. Knute Nelson of Minnesota, who, in obedience to a resolution passed by the legislature of his state, issued an invitation to all the states of the Union to take part in a conference to devise means to abolish trusts and combines. Thirty-four states responded by appointing delegates, and nearly that many states were represented to-day. It was expected that Senator Sherman of Ohio, who was appointed a delegate by Gov. McKinley, would be present, but he did not put in an appearance.

The convention was called to order by Gov. Nelson who read an address in which he gave a history of the anti-trust movement in Minnesota which had resulted in the call for the convention. The legislature, Gov. Nelson said, made a searching investigation of the coal trust which exists in Minnesota and the lumber trusts which flourish there. The evidence brought out in the investigation was conclusive, and clearly showed the nature of the combines, but the remedy was not so apparent. The legislature, therefore, determined to ask the other states of the Union to help devise a remedy. "The operations of the trusts," said the speaker, "are so intricate and secret that the courts refuse to define them, except in general terms. The present laws declare them illegal but fail to provide punishment. Relief can only be obtained through statutory enactments which will be sweeping and searching. It is for this convention to take some action which will lead to the enactment of efficient laws." Gov. Nelson then dissected the Sherman anti-trust law, which he said was but an experiment, and one which had resulted in no practical good.

Gov. Nelson, at the conclusion of his speech, moved that a temporary chairman be appointed and the convention organized at once, the motion resulting in the selection of Henry D. Lloyd of Chicago as presiding officer for the time being. Tams Bixby of St. Paul was made temporary secretary.

A committee was appointed to select permanent officers and the convention took a recess for a quarter of an hour. When it was called to order again the committee reported recommending Gov. Nelson as permanent chairman; Edward S. Meaney of Washington for secretary, and J. E. Morton of Kentucky for assistant secretary.

Ignatius Donnelly came to the convention with a series of resolutions which he will ask it to adopt as a declaration against trusts.

POISONED.

Brainerd, Minn., June 6.—News has reached here of a case of supposed poisoning, and Henry Jackson has been arrested, charged with committing that crime on his neighbor, John Peck, who died suddenly in spasms and cramps. The parties all live at Maple Grove, near Brainerd. Peck has been working for Jackson, and took supper at his house, mush and milk being served. After supper Peck went to John Willover's near by, and while there he was seized with cramps, and died in about an hour, in great pain. Before he died he said he knew Jackson had given him a dose, as the mush was so bitter he fed most of it to his dog. The animal has not been seen since, and the country is being searched for him, dead or alive, as that will have much to do with the case. Jackson claims to be innocent. The coroner's jury will return a verdict to-morrow. Peck was a married man. His family is absent from the state on a visit.

JUST A LITTLE RUN.

Madison Wis., June 6.—There were rumers of a slight run on the First National bank this morning, but there were not enough calls of depositors to create any excitement. The bank's weekly balance sheet shows $350,000 in cash on hand this morning to meet demands and no fears are entertained by the officers.

MURDERED.

Grand Rapids, Wis., June 6.—Peter Houston, a farmer living ten miles from here, was murdered by an unknown person, while siting at his fireside. The murderer fired the shot through a window. Houston was but twenty-one years of age and recently married.

INTERNALLY INJURED.

Jamestown, N. D., June 6.—A. Bowland was sent to Brainerd hospital on account of internal injuries and a scalp wound received by slipping from a box car which he was trying to climb. The accident occurred at Steele, fifty miles west of here.

DIED FROM FRIGHT.

Anoka, June 6.—Saturday night Mrs. Foster, mother of Mrs. William Mitchell, took a tablespoonful of carbolic acid, thinking it was syrup of figs. She spit the poison out. A physician was summoned, and during the excitement Mrs. Mitchell, the daughter, dropped dead from fright. Mrs. Foster passed a bad night and may die. The affair caused much excitement.

A good deal of surprise is expressed because the fire loss in this country last year was $151,000,000 as compared with the $144,000,000 in 1891 and $109,000,000 in 1890. People forget that each year in the enormous progress of this country there are many more buildings to consume and many more people to carelessly or designedly set them on fire.—Journal.

The new crew of Red Lake pine estimators passed through here last Friday on their way to Red Lake. The crew is composed of sixteen men under Chief appraiser A. Douglas of Wisconsin. Mr Douglas professed to be ignorant as to what the new appraisers would do in regard to re-appraising the pine already estimated by the former appraisers. He informed us that the interior department would decide the question but what they would decide to do he did not know. It is probable that the work will all be gone over again.

Prof. F. H. Gambell, of St. Hilaire, came down last evening and called at The Times office in search of the fellow who wrote the criticism upon the play presented at Red Lake Falls recently by the St. Hilaire Dramatic Company. Prof. Gambell says the criticism was unjust and many of the assertions were without foundation, The people of Red Lake Falls were well pleased with the performance and the papers of that place spoke of it in the highest terms of praise. The News says that the play was presented to a large and appreciative audiance and the characters were well assumed, and the Gazette gave a half column write up of the performance in which the individual members of the company each came in for a good share of praise.—Crookston Times.

A drop of nicotine on a dog's tongue will make the canine death's sausage in just 14 seconds. Yet a man will fill his skin so full of the poison that when he takes a turkish bath, non-smokers have to leave the apartment. Man is made a little lower than the angels, but by such habits as this and by blowing in $1,000,000,000 yearly for booze, the angels are enabled to remain on top in spite of the attempts of a hustling and progressive civilization.—Journal

Stebbins and wife, Messrs. Ware, Grundy, Knox, Swanstrom and Rev. Willett, and Misses Johnson, Ellen and Helen Wallin, McDougal and Cook.

Crops in Europe are very poor and indications are that the shortage will be very great especially in Italy and England. The cropshortage in Italy alone is estimated at 113,000,000 bushels more than usual, This year's condition of things will undoubtedly affect wheat prices but don,t reckon on $1 or $2 a bushel. We have done that before and got—left. Prices will probably creep up, but if it reaches fair prices we should be satisfiea. Ada Index.

George Ralph was in town last Thursday on his way home from the reservation where he has been with a crew surveying for the past two months. Mr, Ralph informed us that very few contracts are being let on the reservation this year although there is plenty of work yet to be done. It certainly seems that some one who does not want the reservation to open is pulling the strings with good effect. Surely something is wrong as the work is being done just as slowly as possible.

It is apparent that the proposed immigrant tax, levied to prohibit non-supporting immigration, would not do at all. The average wealth per capita of 152,000 immigrants, 20 years old and over, that have come to this country during the past six months, was only $20.09. The proposion to tax immigrants $100 per head or compel them to bring with them enough-wealth to support them for a year, would prohibit from coming 95 percent of the intending immigrants and make the majority of the remainder paupers.—Tribune.

Died: On Sunday morning June 4th Marinius Hendrsckson, age 33 years. The deceased was a native of Norway and was one of the early settlers of St. Hilaire coming here in 1883, and has been in the butcher business here ever since. Had it not been for the terrible habit of over indulgence, which was the cause of his death, he would have been one of our prosperous citizens to-day, He leaves a wife and four small children The funeral takes place to-day the interment being made in the cemetery north of town.

In Minnesota the sheep industry has not yet attained the prominence given to several other branches of stock raising. Indeed the state has more dogs than sheep. Yet the government report for 1891 credits the state with 400,000 sheep, and an average wool clip of seven pounds per sheep. The principal aim of sheep raising in this state is mutton. The government "Special Report on the Sheep Industry," 1892, states, in the chapter on Minnesota: "Sheep now pay the farmer better than any other class of stock, and in the prairie country, those who are now engaged in raising a few sheep find it the most profitable branch of mixed industry." The average annual increase in flock is placed at 95 per cent, and the average cost of keeping $1 or less per head. The government department enumerates numerous advantages—exceptionally favorable climate, the best of feed and water, freedom from disease, and a first class local market —which Minnesota possesses over all eastern states. Sheep brought to this state from Ohio and other eastern sheep regions show a marked gain in weight of fleece and carcass. The government department entertains enthusiastic sentiments regarding the future of Minnesota's sheep industry.—Minneapolis Tribune.

The bank and other failures recently reported represent but a fraction of the loss and distress to our people by reason of the inadequate supply of a circulating medium. Thousands of our best people sit in the valley and shadow of a debt-haunted home. Under the Mosaic law as it came from the hand of divinity the debtor was allowed to go free once in seven years. Where is the voice from out the churches in this Christian land that is being raised in behalf of the debtor? For more than three times seven years the hard hand of usury has been heavy upon the poor and there is but one voice raised in their behalf and it, like the great Master, is despised and without place or influence at the source of power.—Farmer's Tribune.

Thursday May 25th, a farmer named Swensgaard Sweaskenson living on section 23 town of Northland, attempted to burn some stubble around his barn. The barn caught fire and while attempting to save a span of horses the roof fell in burning to death the man and team. The fire spread to the house, which with its contents was destroyed, In fact nothing was left but the mortgage. A deputy coroner came up from Crookston held an inquest and gave his decision to the effect that the man was burned to death, What was left of the remains were interred by undertaker McDonald,—East Grand Forks Courier.

Prof. Hick's predictions for June are as follows. Disturbances will disappear eastward by the 3rd, leaving pleasant weather behind. The 7th and 8th will bring higher temperature with storms. About the 10th it will begin to grow excessively warm, which will increase during the 11th and 12th or until general storms of rain thunder and wind result. A series of disturbances about 17th and 18th. The 20th to 25th, is a regular storm period right at the crisis of June solstice. Heavy rains and violent electrical and atmosphere perturbations will be natural. Bright, pleasant days and nights will follow up to the 28th. The month ends warm and stormy.

MORTGAGE SALE.

Default having been made in the conditions of a certain mortgage containing a power of sale, dated July 21st 1892, duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds of Polk county Minnesota, on July 23rd 1892; in book 5o of mortgages on page 187 whereby Nils Skogland and Carolina Skogland, his wife, mortgagors, mortgaged to the Security Trust Company, mortgagee, all that tract, piece or parcel of land situate in the county of Polk and state of Minnesota, described as follows to-wit: The south half of the north-east quarter and lots one and two, all in section four in township one hundred and fifty-three of range forty-four, containing 157 acres, by which default the power of sale has become operative, and no proceeding at law or otherwise has been instituted to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, and there is now claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice the sum of $524.50.

WHEN THE CIRCUS COMES TO TOWN.

The spring is comin round ag'in, and soon on every tree
You'll hear th' blue birds singin, just as happy as kin be;
The frogs are pipin in th' lane, and on the big board fence
They've pasted up some lithographs about the circus tents—
Of elephants a-dancin with a funny white faced clown,
And you'd better b'lieve I'm goin
When
the circus
comes
town.

Thar's lots of golden chariots with queens and princes on 'em
Who've got tired of rulin kingdoms and had rather be with Barnum.
A cage of tawny lions, where a keeper sits in tights
And hits a lion with a whip, but the critter never bites,
Fur if he even whimpers he can still him with a frown—
And you bet I'll see them lions
When
the circus
comes
town.

I ain't no hand for music, but when that circus band
Strikes up with "Annie Rooney," I tell you what, it's grand!
With the elephants a-waltzin and the horses keepin time,
While clean up on the highest pole a spangled boy will climb
And send a chill right up your back to see him dive way down—
And you kin bet that I won't miss it
When
the circus
comes
town.

That's half a dozen camels and big elephants enuff
To clean this here bull town out if they got to playin rough.
And kangaroos and zebras, and a big long necked giraffe,
And a cage of funny monkeys, 'nuff to make the parson laugh.
I'm a-savin up some money, and as sure as my name's Brown
I'll spend a half a dollar
When
the circus
comes

Pretty Fair Hand.

There's a very pious and diffident young man in Detroit who is so very sensitive that a certain gentleman with a good looking daughter is forever teasing him on all sorts of subjects, and the young fellow has never been able to get even until now. The other day the old one met the young one in a crowd of men.

"Ah, my boy," he said, "you weren't at the club last night?"

"No, sir," was the response, "I was making a few calls."

"O-ho," laughed the old one, with great significance, "making calls, were you? What kind of hand did you hold?" and he winked and laughed again and nudged the young man in the ribs.

Then the inspiration came to the young man.

"They were just too lovely for anything," he said, with a smile. "Your daughter's was one, for instance." And somehow the old one hasn't felt so much like teasing the pious young man since that.—Detroit Free Press.

Didn't Want Them.

Mr. Billus was looking over the plans of a new barn he was preparing to build.

"I don't care about having any windows on the side facing the kitchen yard," he said.

"But you will need them for light," replied the architect.

"Light nothing!" roared Mr. Billus. "Those windows call for 64 panes of glass, and I've got a boy 8 years old! Leave 'em out!"—Chicago Tribune.

Mr. Sedly—Yes, the grief I feel over the loss of my mother drives me across the water. I will never return.

Mr. Chumley—Never return? Are you sure of that?

"No, you will never see me again."

He Was Right.

The story of the rich man's selling all he had and giving it to the poor was the subject of discussion in a certain Sunday school class not long ago. The teacher was illustrating the moral that the lesson conveys. One of her most attentive listeners was a little fellow scarcely 6 years old, but as bright as a dollar and with a tongue that uses the queen's English in a manner that would make that motherly old soul squirm if she heard it. "Now," said the teacher very impressively, "if a man is fortunate enough to make $1,000,000 in the course of his life, it is his duty to give half of it at least to the poor." "Yes," interrupted a prim little girl in one corner, "but how many men make $1,000,000 in the course of their lives?" There was a silence for a moment, when the little fellow chirped in with the caustic answer, "Darn few."—Utica Observer.

Not Interesting to Her.

Husband—You have been worrying me for five years because you were not as well dressed as Mrs. Nexdoor.

Wife—Well?

"Well, he's failed—can't pay his debts."

"Did he owe you anything?"

"No."

Where They Sit.

Mother—Don't you know better than to put your feet on the sofa? Look at the mud. Suppose some one should come in and sit down on it?

FASHION'S DECREES.

Fringes are largely imported in jet, gold, lined crystal, iridescent, garnet and bronze beads.

A new and very shaggy make of cheviot is among the fashionable fabrics for winter traveling costumes, coats and long cloaks.

The newest dress skirts are of the much gored umbrella shape, and some of them have an astonishing "flare" around the lower portion.

With the short waisted empire gowns should always be worn the very short, low French corset, which is merely a support, without at all confining the waist.

Skirt trimmings are everywhere visible, but they are seldom wide. Puffings, plaitings, ruches, tiny frills, fur and feather bands abound, and sometimes on very elegant costumes the slender fur border is headed by a rich bead and metal passementerie.

Feather turbans are again shown with low crowns, plain or indented, the brims close and rolling, the shape long and oval oftener than round, and the whole made of tips of pheasants' or doves' feathers, with aigrettes in front of the same plumage, thickly massed.—New York Evening Post.

THE LATEST NOVELTIES.

Leather is now a favorite medium for silver ornament.

The working out of designs in colored stones is becoming a new art.

Long trident shaped forks without ornament have a good deal of distinction.

Sponge cups of silver for bank tellers and sealing letters are a pretty trifle in view of Christmas.

A spoon for sardines and smelts has a flat bowl of three gold fishes. The handle is made of strips of seaweed.

New letter scales have a circular dial plate on an oblong pedestal. This is a more convenient form than the columnar scale.

There is charming variety in back combs. The handsomest of course have the pierced gold mountings. But these are carried into the shell in numbers of graceful forms.

Fine enameled ornament increases. In brooches the structure is in some strongly defined form, such as a star, cross, triangle or square of stones. These are all united in a round brooch by filling up the interstices with this fine enameled and perforated tracery.—Jewelers' Circular.

which we propose to send to you, transportation paid. The flesh tints are perfect, and the eyes follow you, no matter where you stand. The exquisite reproductions of this greatest painting of Ida Waugh (the most celebrated of modern painters of baby life) are to be given to those who subscribe to Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893. The reproductions cannot be told from the original, which cost $400, and are the same size (17x22 inches). The baby is life size, and absolutely lifelike. We have also in preparation, to present to our subscribers during 1893, other great pictures by such artists as Percy Moran, Maud Humphrey, Louis Deschamps, and others of world-wide renown. Take only two examples of what we did during the past year, "A Yard of Pansies," and "A White House Orchid" by the wife of President Harrison, and you will see what our promises mean.

Those who subscribe for Demorest's Family Magazine for 1893 will possess a gallery of exquisite works of art of great value, besides a Magazine that cannot be equaled by any in the world for its beautiful illustrations and subject matter, that will keep everyone posted on all the topics of the day, and all the fads and different items of interest about the household, besides furnishing interesting reading matter, both grave and gay, for the whole family; and while Demorest's is not a fashion Magazine, its fashion pages are perfect, and we give you, free of cost, all the patterns you wish to use during the year, and in any size you choose. Send in your subscription at once, only $2, and you will really get over $25 in value. Address the publisher, W. Jennings Demorest, 15 East 14th St., New York. What She Said.

A little ejaculation may sometimes express as much annoyance as can be put into words. The following story is told of the wife of one of the best known of American poets: She was in her room when some people came to call. Her husband received the company, and after a while said to his daughter, who was playing about the room:

"Go up stairs and tell your mother that Mr. and Mrs. Blank have come to call."

The child went, and after a while returned and began to play again.

"Did you tell your mamma Mr. and Mrs. Blank are here?" asked her father.

"Oh yes."

"And what did she say?"

The little girl looked up, and after a moment's hesitation exclaimed:

"She said, well, she said, 'Oh, dear!'"

Curiosities About French Women.

A curious state of affairs prevails in France in relation to women. A French woman may become a doctor, a lawyer, a member of the board of education, and may even be decorated with the Cross of the Legion of Honour; but she may not witness a legal document. She occupies an important place in art, business and commerce; but she cannot possess her own earnings if she is married, and she can neither buy nor sell property without her husband's consent.

"Dear me, I have rubbed some of the color off your picture on to my wrap! I don't know whether to feel worse for you or myself," said Miss Harkaway to Smeere.

"How much did the wrap cost?" asked the artist.

"A hundred and fifty dollars," said Miss Harkaway.

"Then feel sorry for yourself. This is a $75 picture," said Smeere.

Prominent Factor in Society.

Nowhere does the young married woman reign in greater supremacy than in the social circles of our own land. She has overcome the shyness of girlhood, though in many cases she is still young enough to be in the school room, but according to the Philadelphia Times her maners have acquired a certain roundness and her conversation a grace and elegance that make her most attractive to men, both old and young. Being herself matrimonially disposed of, a man has no compunction in paying her attentions that would be at once misconstrued if given to her single sister. He can dance with her as often as he likes, chat with her freely, and the world after their second meeting does not announce the engagement. Moreover, the married woman understands men better than the debutante. The latter, expecting to receive adoration, is vexed and put out if she does not obtain as much as she deems sufficient as tribute to her beauty.

The married woman, on the other hand, has learned by experience that men expect to be flattered as well as women, and in a happy little way of her own appeals to a man's vanity and does not for one moment bore him, which is the secret of the entire matter. There is no place so thoroughly delightful to visit as the home of a young couple whose tastes are congenial and whose hospitable instincts welcome within their gates friends of husband and wife alike. A man is proud of the wife that is popular with his friends; that, however, does not mean the one who makes eyes and flirts boldly with every man that is introduced to her, but the one who holds out a friendly hand to the men friends who find her house pleasanter than the club, because presided over by a bright woman who is not fussy if they smoke in her parlor and who adds to rather than detracts from their meetings. She it is whom they will swear by, whom they regard in the light of a sister, and who is the best friend a man can have outside of his mother and his own wife. When she goes out her husband's friends will do all in their power to make her evening as happy as in the days before she bore the name of wife.

The Good Photographer.

The number of steps in the process of making a photograph which call for the exercise of the same artistic powers that must be possessed by the painter will be surprising, says a writer in the New England Magazine. The artist-photographer must select his picture with reference to its composition of lines, masses of light, shade and texture. By his choice of lens, he determines the width of angle or the scope of the picture. In focussing and diaphragming, he divides his definition and his vagueness to suit the requirements of his sense of pictorial beauty. His development is almost as individual as the handling of a painter's brush, which chooses between the minute exactness of a Pre Raphaelite or a Dusseldorf canvas, and the poetic vagueness of a Corot. In printing he has a wide range of expression. He may use the gloss of albuminized paper, the rough surface of Whatman's drawing board, the lustrous sheen of Japanese papers, or the rich depth of a carbon film. Although confined to the monochrome, the various toning baths and the pigments of carbon films open to him an infinite variety of colors, comprising the lustres of gold, silver, platinum and other metals, deep charcoal blacks, and the chalk red of Botticelli. It is, however, not the wealth of materials so much as the artistic discrimination in the use of them which is illustrated by the amateur work of to-day, and in which progress is now being made.

Cleverness in Dressing.

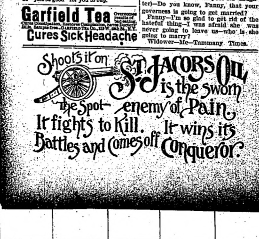
The cleverest woman in the matter of dress is the plain woman who contrives never to let you know she's plain. To be successful in this respect one must have natural good taste. It's no use to put oneself entirely in the hands of a good dressmaker. Dressmakers need directing. They can't be expected to know a customer's weak or strong points as well as she should know them herself. All women, except those with hopelessly bad figures and no throats, pay for dressing. A gown is usually becoming if it is the same color as the wearer's eyes. A bright bandeau under the brim of a hat is apt to have an improving effect. Good taste is a thing to be thankful for. Those who possess it are inclined to value it too lightly.

When Widowers Are Stricken.

Widower (to his ten-year-old daughter)—Do you know, Fanny, that your governess is going to get married?

Fanny—I'm so glad to get rid of the hateful thing—I was afraid she was never going to leave us—who is she going to marry?

Widower—Me—Tammany Times.



A VAIN MAD LOVE.

Claire Bertram stood beside the sitting room window at Chetwynd Court, radiant in all her Southern beauty—a fascinating, graceful creature, in a robe of amber silk, with one crimson rose fastened in her waving black hair, and a tender light softening the flashing glory of her great Assyrian eyes.

"It is surely a jest," she said, turning suddenly to look up into the handsome face of the man before her. "Going to leave home, friends—all? Why, remember, Miriam is your wife!"

"I forgot nothing," he said, slowly. "It is her wish that I should go. You know there has never been any love between Miriam and me—nothing but warfare from the first of our married life. Our marriage was the maddest of follies—a compact at the death-bed of her eccentric foster-mother. It was to save the girl from poverty that I, in pity, married her, and now her wretched temper and jealousies are my reward. Yes, Miriam and I must part!"

Claire Bertram laid her jeweled hand upon his arm.

"Don't be driven to this mad act," she said. "Death, it is feared, will soon claim your wife; surely your duty lies here."

"No; I will take her at her word and go," he answered, resolutely. "Claire, you are her guest and most trusted friend; let me speak frankly with you. You have witnessed many stormy interviews in which Miriam has taunted me about a romance in my past life. She has given you her version of it; let me give you mine. It was while I was abroad that I fell in love with a beautiful working girl, the adopted daughter of Capt. Lescours' widow, and on account of a romantic episode in her life, I called her my 'little sea-waif.' For eighteen years ago," he went on, wondering at the sudden pallor upon his listener's face, "the good ship Urania was destroyed by fire at sea, and all on board perished save the captain's wife and a little babe, who—— But, Claire, are you ill?"

"No—no!" she said hoarsely. "I pray you, go on. I am interested. What—what of this babe—this waif of the sea?"

"She was adopted by the captain's wife, and was named Dorothy. Two years ago Mrs. Lescours died, leaving valuable papers by which Dorothy could prove her birthright, but these documents were stolen. Then I was summoned back to America, my little sea-waif promising to become my wife on my return; but, alas! I never saw her again, for two weeks later I received the news of her death. Then came my marriage to Miriam. One day my wife, in her jealousy and rage, confessed that she had estranged Dorothy Lescours and me—that the girl was not dead, and that I, blinded by her plot, had deserted my sea-waif and married her rival. I went back to Paris to explain all to Dorothy, but I could find no trace of her. There, you know the true facts. Was I to blame?"

"No," Claire answered huskily, her face strangely pallid. "Such a wrong I could never forgive. Indeed, I pity you!"

Roy Chetwynd held out his hand to her.

"I have a favor to ask of you," he said. "Promise me that you will stay here with Miriam to the—end, for it will not be long, the physician says, and then—then I will return a free man, and thank you as you deserve."

Her heart thrilled with mad triumph at his words—he would return to "thank her as she deserved!" Ah! it meant so much to her, who worshiped him so madly.

"I promise," she answered; "and when you return I will claim my reward."

She meant his love—himself—while he meant what he said, nothing more nor less, and so, never dreamed of enlightening a mistake of whose tragic darkness he was not aware.

And that night, after he had bidden her good-bye and left Chetowynd Court, she stood at the open window in the music room, looking out upon the moonlit scene with hard, glistening eyes.

"His wife's friend!" she muttered, sibilantly. "Ah, if he knew that he leaves her with her most bitter foe, for I hate her—she, who alone bars me out from his love! My God, if she should live! No, no! she shall not stand forever between us! I swear that, in spite of life itself, I shall yet win him!" flinging back her head defiantly, her bosom rising and falling tumultously.

"But, thank heaven!" she went on, "Dorothy Lescours is dead and in her grave—the little sea-waif he loved, curse her! from whom I have stolen name, fortune, all! I dared not tell him that she was dead, lest I betray myself! Oh, what a guilty wretch I am! If he should discover the desperate game I have played—I, that miserable beggar, who was taken from the streets of Paris to lead the glittering life of a danseuse, until fate put me into a dead girl's place! Ah, I have blinded the world, and I am safe! Now it is either triumph and his love for me, or—the bitter, bitter dregs of a wrecked life."

Her hands clinched madly; her eyes fierce and wrathful, staring straight before her; when suddenly a shadow darkened the open window, a hand was laid roughly upon her arm, and, with a smothered cry, she reeled back face to face with the man standing there in the stream of brilliant moonlight.

She threw out both hands as though to ward off a phantom.

"Philip Danton!" she panted. "My God, you!"

"Yes, Philip Danton," he replied. "Like the proverbial bad penny, I have turned up again. But, presto! what a change. So you have buried the old life and secured—this! Well, Carlotta, you are clever. I suppose you thought you had escaped me—eh, you d—l?"

She clutched at his arm in an agony of despair.

"But you will not betray me? Have some mercy on me!"

"Mercy! At my hands? Do you think I have hunted down the wife who wronged and deserted me, only to fling my vengeance to the wind and spare her? Mercy from me? Never."

She flung herself at his feet, lifting a face all stark and ghastly with abject terror to him.

"My God! don't betray me," she implored. "Let me explain! It may move you to pity! I believed I loved you in those dark days in France and became your wife. But I soon hated and feared you. I found I was bound by a ring of iron; the wife of a notorious thief and gambler! One day, in frantic despair, I exposed you and your crimes to the police, and then deserted you. I took refuge in the home of the only friend I had in the world, Dorothy Lescours, the adopted daughter of a poor widow. Two years ago Mrs. Lescours died. While she lay on her death bed I stole some papers from her, which proved Dorothy's rights to a large fortune. Temptation came to me. I paid an old French hag, Mother Dumont, to murder Dorothy, and, coming here, I claimed the dead girl's name and fortune. Now you know all. Can nothing tempt you to leave me and keep silent? Remember, you are an escaped convict, and I can betray you."

"By which mad act you would seal your own doom!" he answered. "As for leaving you, I say—no! To keep silent—well, on one condition: That you acknowledge me as your husband, and let me share your ill-gotten gains. We can assume fictitious names and begin life anew. There, accede to my terms, or I will hurl you from the high position fraud and crime have won for you!"

With sudden, reckless defiance, she sprung to her feet.

"Do all you threaten; I defy you!" she cried out bleakly. "For the girl is dead—and the dead tell no tales!"

"Don't make so sure about that, you devil! You never saw old Dumont commit the deed! What if I should tell you that the hag spared your victim for hush money, eh?"

A shrill cry broke from the adventuress' lips.

"Yes," he went on; "Dorothy Lescours still lives, and crafty Dumont has turned the tables upon you! But ah, dead and in her grave, the poor girl could not be more buried than she is, for the walls of a madhouse hide her from the world, and yet she is as sane as you are! Now, Carlotta Danton, you can either purchase my silence or—accept your doom! You see, I haven't played the spy here without an aim in view. It seems Roy Chetwynd loved the girl you wronged, and you, in turn, worship the handsome fellow, who has left his wife here alone at your mercy! Oh, yes, I understand the clever game all through! Come, let us settle this."

Footsteps sounded in the outer hall, and the adventuress threw up her hand warningly.

"Hush!" she cried; "some one is coming! I will meet you at midnight on the old Tarnwater bridge back of the court, and will accede to any terms if you will only leave me and keep—. Go quick!"

And thrusting him through the open French window, she turned to face the intruder, but it was only a servant and with a single sigh of relief she glided from the room, up to the boudoir, and sunk into a chair, a ghastly, huddled sight.

"God help me now!" she broke out laboriously. "Hemmed in, and at that demon's mercy?! He can ruin me by a word! But, oh, it must not be!" with a sudden, fierce cry. "He, too, is playing for high stakes, but I swear he shall never win!"

And slowly the night wore on, but the adventuress, huddled back in her chair, never stirred. Ten o'clock came, eleven, then——

With a little hiss, she sprung to her feet.

"Can I do it?" she muttered. "If I fail— No, no; there is too much at stake! I'll dupe Philip Danton if it costs me my life!" and, gliding over to a malachite casket, she threw open the upper lid, and drew forth a stiletto. "This is my last hope! He defies me, and would balk my game; let him pay the penalty."

She waited until the clock struck the midnight hour, then, gliding from the house, sped straight down to the bridge.

"If he should suspect," she thought, "and not come—if——"

She paused. Yes, there he stood on the old bridge, with his back to her, tall, dark and grim in the moonlight.

"Curse him!" she panted. "Now the battle has begun!"

And stealthily she crept toward him, her eyes blazing fiercely, and seizing her stiletto, she sprung suddenly upon him, plunging the weapon deep into his side. With a wild shriek, he staggered back against the broken railing of the bridge, beating the air wildly with his hands, then went crashing to the black waters below.

"Safe at last!" the adventuress hissed, triumphantly, flashing about and speeding from the bridge. "Now nothing can unmask me! I can defy even heaven to do it!"

Cold, wet and dismal, the night of the fifteenth of February fell—the memorable night of Roy Chetwynd's return home.

For Miriam had been laid in her grave, beyond all jealousy and rage; and the adventuress stood in the reception room at Chetwynd Court, waiting for the man she loved and—her reward.

Suddenly familiar footsteps reached her, and she turned to greet her idol, only to recoil in horror, for there, clinging to Roy Chetwynd's arm, stood the sea-waif she had wronged!

"My God, Dorothy!" the adventuress gasped, reeling back.

"Yes," Roy Chetwynd said, sternly, "Dorothy, my wife, who is here to claim her rights!"

"Your wife?" the guilty creature cried. "And I thought—— Oh, heaven, after all my sin, this is my reward!"

"You are but immeshed in your own crafty web!" he responded. "Your attempt to murder Philip Danton failed; for the deed was witnessed by one of my servants, who rescued your victim! Through your husband's aid I have found Dorothy, who, I can now prove, is the true Claire Bertram!"

"This is a plot against me!" the adventuress cried. "That girl is an impostor! I defy her to deny my charge, and——"

"I defy you to deny mine!" rung out a familiar voice.

And swinging round, she came face to face with Philip Danton.

"Lost!" she hissed. "Duped after all, and by you!"

"Yes," he said, "and at last my oath of vengeance is fulfilled! You fiend incarnate, can you deny your sin now?"

"God help me!" she cried bitterly. "Yes, I am guilty! But, Roy Chetwynd, you have me to thank for your bride. Miriam would not have died, and I—I poisoned her! No, I am not mad. I thought, if you were free, you would wed me! But, oh"—turning fiercely upon Dorothy—"you shall now feel my vengeance, curse you!"

And seizing a revolver from the bosom of her dress, she aimed it at her rival; but Danton sprung forward and strove to tear the weapon from her. There was a struggle, then a sudden flash, a report, and the adventuress crashed to the floor.

"Bear witness all," cried Danton, in a ringing voice, "that the revolver went off in her own hand; my wife killed herself!"

It was true. And while that wild confusion was reigning, Danton quietly left the court, and was never again seen there.

That was over a year ago; and now Roy Chetwynd and his wife, happy and contented at last, often recall that winter night's tragedy, and shudder at the memory of one woman's vain, mad love.

LOVE IN PENNSYLVANIA.

After the Deacon Corralled the Messenger the Young People Eloped.

When the news of the presidential election reached here last fall, Deacon Horace Dykeman shook his fist under Fred Gilbert's nose, in John Gilbert's blacksmith shop, and yelled: "The country's ruined and you helped do it!" Deacon Dykeman is a Republican, says the Oakland, Pa., correspondent of the New York Sun, and the election of the national Democratic ticket made him very wrathy. Gilbert, who is a young Democrat, smiled at the deacon, backed away from his fist and gave three cheers for Cleveland and Stevenson.

"Cheer, you copperheaded reprobate!" roared the deacon and out he rushed. He quickly turned back and pointing his finger at the robust young Democrat, said: "See here, Gilbert, in the future I won't have anything to do with you. You understand what I mean, don't you?" And with that he wheeled about and started for home.

Gilbert was keeping company with Miss Emily, Deacon Dykeman's eldest daughter, and understood what the deacon meant, but imagined that he would change his mind in a few days. The next time that Gilbert went to call on Miss Dykeman it was Sunday afternoon, and the deacon met him at the door and waved him back. "The country's ruined," he shouted, "and you helped do it! So keep off my premises entirely in the future! Don't come near my house again!"

Gilbert went away, and in the evening he and Miss Dykeman met and took a stroll. They soon became engaged, the agreement being that the marriage should not take place until Miss Dykeman had overcome her father's enmity toward Gilbert and won his consent. Miss Dykeman labored hard, but the deacon was firm in his decision not to have anything to do with the young man, and then Mrs. Dykeman tried to reconcile him, but in vain.

There is one farm between the Dykeman and Gilbert residences, and when the lovers couldn't meet they sent notes to one another. Miss Dykeman owned an intelligent dog named Beauty, and one day she concealed a note in his collar and told him to run down to Mr. Gilbert's and give it to Fred. Beauty trotted off, and Miss Dykeman watched him till he got to the Gilbert door yard. Young Gilbert was expecting the dog, and Beauty stayed around until he had answered the love letter and fastened it to his collar, when he cantered back to his mistress. Beauty soon got so that he barked and made a great fuss whenever Miss Dykeman failed to send him on the errand, dashing off in great haste when he found that he had a note to deliver, and waiting patiently until the note was answered and placed in his charge.

One afternoon, in the early part of February, Miss Dykeman saw her father coming up the road just after she had sent Beauty off to the Gilbert place with a note for Fred. The deacon told the dog to go back, but Beauty dashed past him and went on much to the deacon's astonishment. A few days later the deacon caught Beauty while he was on his way to Gilbert's with one of Emily's notes. The deacon read it, and that was the end of Beauty's occupation as a note-bearer between the lovers. In the note Miss Dykeman told Mr. Gilbert to meet her at the donation party at Eli Morehouse's residence. Her father refused to let her go, and his conduct brought the courtship to a sudden termination.

On February 17 Miss Dykeman received a letter from an aunt in Tompkins county, New York, telling her to come there at once if she wished to see her cousin, a young woman of her own age, alive. Mr. Dykeman urged his daughter to go at once, and she did so. It was a put-up job on the deacon, for Gilbert joined Miss Dykeman on February 20, and in a few days the deacon received a letter from Emily, in which she informed him that she had been married to Gilbert, and hoped that he would be ready to forgive them both when they returned.

In regard to the decision of a Vermont judge that when a maiden discards her lover she must return the engagement ring he has given her, it is recalled that the ruling of an English court is that an engagement ring is not recoverable in any circumstances.

SHORT AND SELECT.

The English skylark has often been introduced into New England, but all attempts to domesticate it have proved futile, for the climate is too severe.

At Uniontown, Pa., the jury in the case of Robert Hughes, who sued the Baltimore and Ohio railway company for $25,000 damages for a leg lost in a wreck two years ago, found for the plaintiff in the sum of $2,833.

They are experimenting with an electric cab in Berlin by having it run races with the ordinary horse cabs. The reports to date seem to show the superiority of the vehicle propelled by electricity. A distance of six English miles was covered in twenty minutes, or at the rate of about three minutes a mile, by it.

A short time ago, on board a train of cars, a man was very much engaged in trying to prove that all men are growing wiser, when a half-drunken fellow staggered up to him, saying: "Mr. ——, what a big fool your grandfather must have been!" Mr. —— at once changed the subject, while the car was filled with shouts.

Several men who have outlived their greatness are now glad to earn their living as coachmen in Berlin. Among them are sixteen nobles, seven retired army officers and three pulpitless pastors. Three British notabilities now gleefully crack the whip as London cabmen; they are an ex-member of parliament, a baron and a marquis.

An usher at Centenary church, at Greensboro, N. C., got a little frustrated one Sunday night recently, but he did the best thing he could under the circumstances. The room was excessively warm, and he tried his level best to lower a window from the top, but failed. Then he took down the thermometer and carried it out of doors.

Miraculous Change

Miss Blanche Clark, Duluth, Minn.

"Seven years ago our daughter Blanche, then four years of age, had a humor break out on her hands and face, which our physician pronounced eczema. She seemed to derive no benefit at all and if the cold air reached her face or hands, they would swell up and look almost purple, and headed blisters would form and break, discharging a watery substance and that attended it would drive the child nearly wild. Unless we encased her little hands she would tear patches of skin from her face and hands. The itching was intense. We tried many doctors and many remedies and at last gave the case up as hopeless. But I concluded

Hypnotized by a Mirror.

The glitter of the mirror soon attracted a host of chattering monkeys. I watched them for an hour, and then cautiously approached. They disappeared like magic when they saw me—all but one, a chimpanzee. When I got close to it I found that it stood as if transfixed, with widely opened eyes and dilated pupils, gazing at the mirror. There was a slight tremulous motion in the limbs and a spasmodic twitching of the ears. I could hardly believe it. The animal was hypnotized. It was making a guttural sound like "achru." I put the monkey in a bamboo cage, and on examining him about an hour afterwards found him still under the hypnotic influence. I revived him with a good strong sniff of ammonia, and held a lighted taper before his eyes. He was quite tractable, and said, "achru," and a few more tests satisfied me that this word embodied the idea of heat, light, warmth and brightness. Other words followed, and it was wonderful to take note of his awakening intelligence.—From Prof. Garner's report of observations in Africa.

The "Colorless" Woman.

It is a curious thing that the colorless woman—the woman with no mind of her own, that is—generally goes in for gowns to match, says Miss Matalini in the Pall Mall Budget. I notice that she usually affects the most insipid, most uninteresting shades of grey, fawny greys, and drabs. Her taste in dress, like her character, is indefinite. She is a vague woman. "Good, sweet, and amiable," no doubt, though there is not much virtue in being good if you have not the capacity for being bad, but monotonous, like her clothes. This is the type of person who looks upon cigarette smoking among ladies as "disgraceful"—not from conviction, of course, for she couldn't think seriously for a couple of minutes about anything but because it isn't conventional. The person who habitually says "disgraceful" always amuses me.

If It Is Like Its Name.

"Suppose I make the next gown of parrot-green velvet?" suggested Mrs. Skadd's dressmaker.

"Oh, that's too loud," was the lady's reply.

FLOORED BUT ONCE.

But That Time Got a Knock Down Blow.

Gov. Porter tells a good story on Col. "Dick" Wintersmith, one of the best known characters around Washington, and a Kentuckian by birth. Col. Wintersmith is a most congenial companion, tells a good story as well as any one, and is brilliant in repartee. "I never knew him to be turned down but once," said Gov. Porter. "Mike Cluskey was the man who did it. Cluskey was editor of the Memphis Avalanche at the breaking out of the war, but thinking the sword mightier than the pen laid down the latter for the former. He was elected to the Confederate congress at Richmond, and served as a member until the war was over. After peace had been declared, he was making his way back to Tennessee and stopped at Louisville, Ky. Col. Wintersmith had returned from the army also, and having lost his fortune by the war was living in Louisville with a wealthy sister-in-law, who was a widow. Col. Wintersmith was at home there, and had everything at his disposal as if it had been his own. He lived in elegance.

"When Maj. Cluskey reached Louisville Col. Wintersmith took him to his 'home,' knew that his old comrade was 'busted,' and told him to make this place his home as long as he liked. Maj. Cluskey accepted. About two or three months after he had been a guest the major and his hostess got in a carriage, drove around to the home of a priest and were married. Col. Wintersmith heard of it and rushed after them to find out what it meant. Maj. Cluskey, in his most gallant manner, replied: 'It means, colonel, that I am the host, you the guest, and so long as you make yourself agreeable we will be glad to have you remain with us.'

"It was the only time I ever saw Dick floored, but he was completely knocked out that time. I have seen Dick since then, however, get even by taking Senator Joe Blackburn to a standstill."

A STUFFED CATFISH.

The Job Perpetrated by Wicked Workers in a Car-Shop.

Some of the boys at the railroad shops perpetrated a cruel joke on a fellow workman who resides in the Third ward on Thursday last, says the Sacramento News. A lad who earns an honest dollar by peddling fish sold to the party referred to a large catfish, and he deposited his purchase in a large water-trough. In a short time his duties called him to another department and an opportunity was afforded the jokers to get in their deadly work. They took the catfish, opened its capacious jaws and thrust into its well developed anatomy a section of lead pipe about a foot in length. The job was perfected with the nicety characteristic of the work of the employes of the shops, and the fish was then put back in the trough. The day's work done the gentleman from the Third took his fish home, and set about to put the specimen of the finny tribe in condition for the morning meal. He was surprised when his knife came in contact with a hard substance, but was simply astounded when the piece of lead pipe was exposed to view. Not only the other members of the family but the neighbors were called in to gaze upon the wonder. The purchaser of the monstrosity, taking the firmness of the flesh about the metal as a basis, even figured out the time the pipe must have been incased in the fish's digestive organs. The next morning the discoverer was not as full of fish as he was of pisciculture, and on the latter subject he discoursed learnedly to his fellow employes while waiting for the big whistle to sound. He paid particular attention to the omnivorous propensities of the catfish, and contended that when it comes to that characteristic the goat isn't in it. When he cited the lead pipe incident it was too much, and the roar that went up almost drowned the announcement that it was time to go to work.

SHOT HIS OWN SISTER

TERRIBLE DEED OF A BOY IN SOUTH DAKOTA.

Becoming Angered at His Baby Sister, Her Brother Shoots Her—He Expresses no Regret for the Terrible Act.

Chamberlain, S. D., June 13.—One of the most devilish and unnatural deeds ever perpetrated in the state was committed in Charles Mix county. Mrs. Eflin, a farmer's wife, left her twelve-year-old son in charge of his little sister, a child about two years old, while she went to another part of the farm to work in the garden. During the forenoon the little one became fretful, when the inhuman boy got down the shotgun, telling her she must stop crying or he would kill her. The frightened child ran screaming behind the stove to the window, when the young villain laid the muzzle of the gun across the stove, aimed it at the terrified child and deliberately pulled the trigger. The charge entered the upper part of the forehead, crushing through the skull and laying bare the brain. After reloading the gun and putting it in its place on the wall, the boy picked up the bleeding form of his sister and laid it in the cradle. After the cradle had become saturated with blood he carried her to the bed, where she was found by the mother when she returned to her house to prepare dinner. The young fiend evinces the most stolid indifference to the fate of his sister or his awful deed. The child lived but a short time.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Minneapolis, June 13.—Albert Wilkinson, a switchman in the employ of the Minneapolis & St. Louis railway, was so terribly injured yesterday that he died within an hour. He was with a St. Louis freight train in the Northern Pacific yards, near Seventh avenue north, where a transfer was being made. The cars were standing, the locomotive being detached in another part of the yard. As far as could be learned Wilkinson stepped between two cars when another car was "kicked" against the train and he was caught between the bumpers. Wilkinson was a married man and resided at 913 Third avenue north.

The wounds inflicted by Tow are likely to cause death, as Burkitt's intestines are exposed; also one of his lungs. Tow skipped at once, as did also Fawcett.

HOW THEY STAND.

Washington, June 13.—The New York Times asked all members of congress what they would do regarding the Sherman law. Not enough replied to tell what will be done. Five Minnesota men responded as follows:

Loren Fletcher.—The country needs a prompt and decisive financial policy, repeal of the so-called Sherman law.

M. R. Baldwin—I favor the repeal of the Sherman law. Believe its repeal possible at this time, and favor an immediate extra session of congress.

A. R. Kiefer—I favor the immediate repeal of the Sherman silver act in connection with a substitute therefor regulating the value of silver on a basis of the market value of silver and free coinage thereof. Am not opposed to a reasonable amount of treasury notes that shall be receivable for all dues to the United States, but prefer that national banks should furnish the paper currency. Am opposed to the issue of any bonds.

O. M. Hall—The Sherman law must be repealed, but it has created a home market for all our silver. Repeal destroys market and may precipitate the ruin of mining interests. Why not substitute free or equal coinage on both metals, your new rates of present bullion value giving honest bimetalism? This removes disease and dangers of its cure. Such are my impressions, not fixed opinion.

H. E. Boen—First give silver the same right of coinage and legal tender quality as gold, a ratio 16 to 1, and then repeal the Sherman law or demonetize gold and declare gold contracts void. I favor bimetalism or a paper currency, if full legal tender, and issue it in payment of services rendered and materials furnished to the government. That will be a cheap, safe and sufficient way out of the difficulty, and will make us independent of the London bankers, who are causing trouble.

CAUGHT A SAFE BLOWER.

Racine, Wis., June 13.—Otto Gommull, a nineteen-year-old safe cracker, is in jail here. He admits his guilt and will probably be sent to the penitentiary. The young thief was making good progress in breaking open the Belle City Planing mill safe when he was observed. He made his escape but was arrested at his home and confessed. It is believed that he committed many of the recent burglaries. Young Gummull is the son of Germans of this city who are in moderate circumstances.

EXTENSION.

Mason City, Iowa, June 13.—It is now believed that the Winona & Southwestern will build on both roads surveyed by them, the one into this city, the other into Hampton and southwest to Webster City. WANTED TO HANG HIM

LIVELY DEMONSTRATION AT THE WASHINGTON INQUEST.

Clerks Who Were in the Terrible Accident at Ford's Theatre Cry for the Blood of the Chief of Their Department.

Washington, June 13.—At the inquest for the accident at Ford's theater, a well dressed man walked forward and in a voice trembling with passion, shaking his fist in Col. Ainsworth's face, shouted:

"You murdered my brother, and you shan't sit there intimidating these witnesses."

The man was Charles Barnes, whose brother was a victim of the disaster. After the uproar thus occasioned had quieted, Mr. Davis, representing Col. Ainsworth, the chief of the bureau, started to speak, when a dozen excited department clerks rose to their feet and shouted for him to sit down. The lieutenant of police present tried to quiet the outbreak, but his voice was as ineffectual as it would have been in a cyclone. The excitement grew in intensity. Nearly every clerk present who was employed in the old theater building was on his feet shouting. At first they only called "Sit down!" "Shut your mouth!" but finally some frenzied individual cried "Hang him! hang him!"

Men were springing forward by this time, and mere spectators present sought cover. It looked as if harm would come to Col. Ainsworth, for some clerks were shaking their fists over his head, and others were pushing forward as if they wished to tear him to pieces. Mr. Warner, one of the jurors, finally managed to quiet the mob, and the deputy coroner adjourned the inquest.

A NEW ARENA.

Roby, Ind., June 13.—The Columbia Athletic club was inaugurated last night in the presence of a throng of 3,000 people with a ten-round bout between Joe Goddard of Australia and Willis Kennedy of St. Louis for a purse of $1,200 and a finish fight between Martin Costello and Billy Woods for a purse of $2,500. Goddard won in the second round after making a chopping block of Kennedy, who did nothing but fall down and get up, and finally remained down for good. The fight between Costello and Woods was declared a draw after fifty-seven rounds.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Kankakee, Ill., June 13.—The French Catholic church at St. Anne was struck by lightning. The loss reaches $30,000. This church enjoyed a national reputation. They claim to have a finger bone of the Virgin Mary, and the tradition is that it is possessed of healing powers.

GERMAN K. OF P.

The convention will seek to take measures to reinstate the German ritual.

AN OLD SKELETON.

Cumberland, Wis., June 13.—A mound has been opened near this city in which was found the skeleton of a man in a sitting posture. The size and length of the bones would indicate a man of enormous proportions. The fact that several pine trees, two and three feet in diameter, stand on the mound, is proof that whether the skeleton is that of a mound builder or Indian it has been there at least 350 years.

NEW EVIDENCE.

Peoria, Ill., June 13.—Rumors of startling developments in the affairs of the whisky trust have been started by the announcement of the fact that Attorney General Maloney has been quietly receiving affidavits of distillers here and in other places. These affidavits have been made the groundwork of additional charges against the trust, papers for which were served on President Greenhut during his Chicago visit. This is confirmed by Mr. Greenhut himself, but he refuses to give any information concerning their character.

The Northern Pacific Elevator Company and the Red River Valley Elevator Company asked for a receiver yesterday afternoon before Judge Sanborn, of the United States court. The result of the motion was the appointment by the court of M. J. Forbes, of Duluth, as receiver for both companies, which are practically under one management. As stated yesterday there are about 200 elevators involved, 110 in Minnesota, 50 in the west and 50 in the Red River Valley. Receiver Forbes was in charge of the companies' affairs today and he will proceed as fast as practicable with a settlement with the creditors. The companies will retire, of course, for the present from the purchasing of grain; otherwise the business will be proceeded with in the regular way under the receiver's direction.—Minneapolis Journal,

The price of wheat in Chicago was lower on Monday; June 5, than it has been at any time for twenty-nine years. This is as far back as there is a record at hand. The price Monday was 63 3-8 cents. The next lowest price was in August 1887, when it fell to 67 5-8 cents. There was a drop of 8½ cents on Monday but on Tuesday it recovered 2 cents; presumably upon the official announcement by the president that he would convene congress at once to legislate on the financial situation. In the local market, wheat No. 1 hard is 50 cents, the lowest point with one exception in the history of wheat buying. There has been quite a large amount of wheat brought in within the last ten days.—Fergus Falls Journal.

Country editors as a rule are very selfish lot of men, though they will not admit it. Why they are so selfish that they often get mad at the most trivial matters. For instance if any one who is getting up an entertainment furnishes the paper forty or fifty lines of locals concerning the entertainment to help "fill up" the paper and then out of consideration for the over worked editor takes all the poster printing to a job office, that selfish editor gets mad about it.—Long Prairie Argus.

Some Very Amusing Mistakes Made by Speakers.

That is a queer and most embarrassing faculty which we all possess at some time in our lives—of meaning one thing and saying another.

When a rather dapper young man was introduced to a very distinguished lady, he bowed low and said:

"I think, madam, you have had the pleasure of meeting me before."

Such mistakes are very frequent on the platform of the amateur performance. A regular attendant at these places noted the following absurd mistakes, some of which were either unobserved by the audience or supposed to be the proper thing in the proper place. A charming young lady thus rendered a climax in a celebrated poem:

"Go, your liver loves," said Cromwell. "Curfew shall not ring tonight."

In another recitation the reader "clasped to her heart the throbbing boy."

An orator made an unexpected effect by thus reversing matters, "He jests at wounds who never felt a scar."

The pet of the family, having been duly instructed in his part, goes on the platform and begins boldly:

I wish I had a little pet
To dog him on the head.

This is equaled by a recent small hero who, with all the confidence in the world, approached the audience and began:

Under the spreading black smith tree
The village chestnut stands.

A confusion of memory caused an elocutionist to change a line of Barbara Frietchie rather surprisingly:

When Lee marched over the garden wall.

Pleasant Surprise.

An amusing instance of the simplicity of a little negro boy is told by a lady in whose family the lad lived for several years. When he was about 7 years old, he was set to learn words in an old spelling book.

He at once became interested in watching a race between a small boy and old Father Time as represented by an engraving, and every spare moment he had during the day he devoted to the contemplation of this chase, which was to him both real and exciting.

When bedtime came, he reluctantly laid aside the book, and his study of "dat ol' feller wid de mowin scyve" had to be given up for that day. The next morning the first thing he did was to get the old speller and turn its pages eagerly until he came to the exciting picture.

He gazed intently at the figures for an instant and then exclaimed, with a scream of delight as he capered joyfully about the kitchen, book in hand:

"He ain' kotched 'im yit, no, sah! Cracky, he ain' kotched 'im yit!"—Youth's Companion.

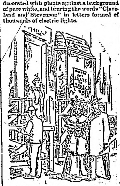
Mr. Cleveland will pay $175 a day for the parlors which he occupies at the Arlington hotel. At least that is said to be the price which he is to pay, but some people doubt if he is to pay anything more than the usual price of $6 or $7 a day for each person in his party.

Eight years ago Mr. Cleveland stopped at the same hotel when he came to Washington to be inaugurated, and thus gave the inn such a reputation that its proprietor has since made a fortune. It fixed that hotel as the leading caravansary of the capital and brought such a large volume of gilt edged trade that since Mr. Cleveland was here before the capacity of the house has been doubled. It would scarcely be right, after Mr. Cleveland had made the fortune of the owner, to be required to pay $175 a day for his accommodation, nor is it likely that he is to pay any such sum.

The proprietor of another good hotel made a desperate effort to capture the presidential party. He went to the expense of fitting up special parlors for the use of the president and his wife and invited Mr. Cleveland to be his guest without charge or at a mere nominal price. He brought a great deal of political influence to bear for the attainment of his purpose, but all unavailingly. Mr. Cleveland decided to make his headquarters at the same place where he stopped before, and the enterprising but unlucky owner of the other house will have to find some other way to popularize his hostelry.

Rivalry for the presidential patronage is already active in this city. Not only the hotels, but the physicians, the florists, the grocers, the butchers, the plumbers and even the churches, are eager to number the boss of the White House among their customers. To be the White House physician, the White House druggist, the White House butcher or the White House spiritual adviser is considered almost as desirable as to be "hatter to the Prince of Wales" or "bootmaker to her majesty the queen" on the other side of the water.

Curious crowds surround all the places in the city where arrangements are being made for the great event of next Saturday. For instance, at the pension office, where a big gang of workmen are completing the magnificent decorations, policemen are always on hand to keep the crowds moving. The scenes to be witnessed in that gigantic hall are indeed interesting. Workmen climb to dizzy heights, draping and festooning the timbers and steel rods, causing the spectators below to hold their breath in fear of accident. The entire ceiling of the big hall has been covered with a canopy of white and gold, forming in itself a most gorgeous spectacle. Ten thousand yards of material were required, and to hoist it into position 85,000 feet of rope were employed. Silk banners, innumerable flags, the coats of arms of all the states in silver and gold, decorate the galleries and doorways. Nothing prettier than the electric arches at either end of the hall was ever seen. Each is 65 feet high, decorated with plants against a background of pure white, and bearing the words "Cleveland and Stevenson" in letters formed of thousands of electric lights.



EVERY SHOP WINDOW FOR SALE.

At the capitol another crowd is always present watching the decoration of the huge platform which has been built in front of the rotunda. It is from this platform that the president is to deliver his inaugural address. Probably the grandest audience ever faced by an American is that which will assemble at this spot next Saturday. There will be on the platform behind Mr. Cleveland all the dignitaries of the government, congress, the supreme and other courts, the diplomatic representatives at this capital, the army and navy and thousands of distinguished men from all parts of the country—in front literally hundreds of thousands of the brawn and sinew of the land.

While these inauguration occasions are made great events, involving months of hard work and the expenditure of untold thousands of dollars, officially an American coronation is a very simple thing. The most important part of the ceremonies is that which takes place at the capitol at noon. The Fifty-second congress will be in session till almost noon. Very likely the hands of the clocks in the two houses will be moved backward in order to steal a few moments in which to finish up some important legislation. Then the president and his cabinet, the president elect and vice president elect, having been escorted to the capitol by a detachment of police and military, the president elect being also guarded by detectives in citizens' clothing, will assemble in the senate chamber. There both houses of congress and the other great people will be waiting more or less patiently.

After everybody has been seated and the necks of the spectators have been nearly twisted out of joint in the process of catching a glimpse of the big men of the nation, it will take the retiring vice president about two minutes to administer the oath of office to his successor and to declare the Fifty-second congress adjourned without day. The new vice president will announce the call of an extra session of the senate, and that body will meet at once, simply for the purpose of administering oaths to the new senators who may be present.

A recess is then taken, and a mighty procession moves out the doors of the chamber through the rotunda to the platform already spoken of. There the oath of office is administered to the new president by the chief justice of the supreme court, and the inaugural address delivered. Eight years ago Mr. Cleveland stood on this platform facing a spring sun. Four years ago Mr. Harrison stood in a pelting storm of rain. In the betting odds are always on having a stormy 4th of March, but Cleveland's luck may again save him a drenching. So far as the inauguration of the president is concerned, the taking of the oath and the customary address are all there is of the official ceremony, but it is no sooner over than the real show of the day—the great parade down the avenue—begins.

This year the parade is to be a monster. Among the interesting features is to be the presence of a large company of young women from Prince George county, Md., mounted. There are no better horsewomen in the world than these young girls of Maryland and Virginia, in the neighborhood of the capital.

Women Like to Be Invalids.

Women take too kindly to the role of an invalid; the soft, the fleecy white shawl, the little cups of beef tea or plates of oysters. Once let a woman taste the dreamy pleasures of this sort of existence, and, unless some shock or sense of duty arouses her, she will calmly continue for the rest of her days in the pleasant path before her. She smiles sweetly at the little attentions offered her, she dresses in the daintiest of semi-toilets, and she looks so pretty and gentle and patient that it seldom dawns upon her husband that the existence is an ignoble one. But let my lord fall ill, and oh, dear, what a different tale to tell! The valet comes flying from the room followed by a boot; the cook gives notice because the master called the beef tea "beastly stuff;" the housemaid is in tears, because she is not allowed to sweep or dust the sick room. Man, noble man, is a pitiful object when he is sick. Get him thoroughly ill and he is a better patient than a woman. But if he is merely laid up for a day or two with a cold or a bilious attack he persistently kicks, instead of wisely enjoying the rest which a beneficent nature has imposed upon him.—London Hospital.

A Sentry's Wit.

The Russian Marshal Suvaroff was famous as a jester, and was fond of confusing the men under his command by asking them unexpected and absurd questions. But occasionally he met his match. Thus, one bitter January night, such as Russia only can produce, he rode up to a sentry and demanded: "How many stars are there in the sky?"

The soldier, not a whit disturbed, answered coolly:

"Wait a little and I'll tell you." And he deliberately commenced counting. "One, two, three," etc.

When he had reached 100, Suvaroff, who was half frozen, thought it high time to ride off, not, however, without inquiring the name of the ready reckoner. Next day the latter found himself promoted.—Lippincott's.

The Faults and Follies of the Age

Are numerous, but of the latter none is more ridiculous than the promiscuous and random use of laxative pills and other drastic cathartics. These wrench, convulse and weaken both the stomach and the bowels. If Hostetter's Stomach Bitters be used instead of these no-remedies, the result is accomplished without pain and with great benefit to the bowels, the stomach and the liver. Use this remedy when constipation manifests itself, and thereby prevent it from becoming chronic.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

STAMPADES OF MINING DAYS.

One Was Started in a Montana Blizzard Without Any Known Cause.

There have been many stampedes in Montana within the last thirty years. Not stampedes of horses and cattle, but of men. From the discovery of gold on Grasshopper creek, in Beaverhead county, in 1862, to the present day stampedes to new diggings have been of frequent occurrence. From Bannock to Alder Gulch, from Alder Gulch to Last Chance, and thence to Confederate, to Highland, to Silver Bow, Pioneer, Lincoln, Bear and a hundred others. But, according to the Butte Inter-Mountain, one of the worst stampedes that ever took place in Montana was to Sun river in the spring of 1866. That was one of the coldest springs ever experienced by white men in Montana. A terrific blizzard set in shortly after the stampede fairly began for Sun river. No one knew what had been discovered or whether anything at all, but a rumor got abroad that rich diggings had been found, and nearly every man who could rustle a small grub stake and cayuse started for the supposed new gold fields. At that day the country to the north was not inhabited, and the sufferings endured by the stampeders were terrible. Many were frozen in the pitiless storm, a few lost their lives, and to this day a few old timers are living in the state minus fingers and toes from that fearful trip. It turned out also that there had been no discovery of gold made, which added disappointment to the sufferings of the stampeders, and if the party who started the story of rich gold discoveries had been found then his days would have been speedily shortened.

But no one seemed to know then nor does any one now know exactly how the great Sun river stampede started. It is supposed to have been caused by a letter written by a man who had gone north from Last Chance in the fall. This man, in his own estimation, had met with flattering success. He had fallen in with some friendly Blackfoot Indians, secured a squaw who had some horses and a tepee, and was in a land filled with wild game of all kinds. He thought it was the next thing to paradise. He wrote to a friend in Helena that he had struck it rich; intended to stay all winter, and was well fixed and well satisfied with his find, failing to state what that particular find was. To the miners who saw it there was but one meaning to be attached to his words: He had struck diggings, and that is what started the great Sun river stampede in the early days.

To Keep Ice for the Sick.

Cut a piece of clean flannel (white is best) about ten inches or more square. Place this over the top of a glass pitcher or even a tumbler, pressing the flannel down half way or more into the vessel. Then bind the flannel fast to the top of the glass with a string or piece of tape. Now put the ice into the flannel cup and lay another piece of flannel, five or six inches square, upon the ice. Arranged thus, ice will keep many hours.

Destroyed by Fire and Again at Work.

The Price Baking Powder Company of Chicago, which is known throughout the country for the superior excellence of its Baking Powder, met with a serious loss on the morning of May 18th, in the nearly total destruction by fire of its factory and offices. No sooner had the flames been subdued than the work of restoration commenced, and the Company by prudent foresight, having had stored in outside warehouses duplicate machinery, labels and supplies of raw materials in preparation for any emergency, was enabled by energetic management to resume manufacturing within a very few days after the fire, thereby causing its customers but a trifling delay in the filling of their orders. Had the Company not been so prepared the delay would have been very serious, since it would have required months of time to get new machinery.

It is now forty years since the goods manufactured by this Company were first placed on the market, to Dr. Price being due the distinction of having prepared the first can of Cream of Tarter Baking Powder ever manufactured in any country. It was a great discovery, superseding as it did the old method of using cream of tarter and soda separately, to say nothing of saleratus, with which the biscuit of early days was embittered.

The Price Company has no connection whatever with any other baking powder company or manufacturer, notwithstanding representations to the contrary made by other manufacturers whose sole aim is to deceive the public and borrow the good name and fame acquired by the Price Cream Baking Powder, which is known all over the world as the purest and "most perfect made."

The average wages of workingmen in Sunny Spain are 40 cents a day.

UP TO A CERTAIN POINT in the progress of Consumption, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a positive remedy. Even in the most advanced cases, it gives comfort and relief; and where other medicines only relieve, this will cure.

But delay is dangerous, with Consumption. In all the conditions that lead to it, the "Discovery" is the remedy. With severe, lingering Coughs or Weak Lungs, nothing acts so promptly. Every disease that can be reached through the blood yields to this medicine. The Scrofulous affection of the lungs that's called Consumption is one of them. For this, and for every other form of Scrofula, for all blood-taints and disorders, and all chronic Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, the "Discovery" is the only remedy so certain that it can be guaranteed. If it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Can anything else be "just as good" for you to buy? Don't believe it.

Dr. Sage's Remedy positively cures Catarrh.

HEARTS-EASE.

I'm the little heart's-ease!
I don't care for pouting skies!
If the butterfly delay,
Can I, therefore, stay away?
If the coward bumble-bee
In his chimney-corner stay,
I must resolute be!
Who'll apologize for me?

Dear, old-fashioned little flower!
Eden is old-fashioned, too—
Birds are antiquated fellows—
Heaven does not change her blue,—
Nor will I, the little heart's-ease
Ever be induced to do.
—Emily Dickinson.

TWO FAIR ROGUES.

It seemed as if the fabled "Puck" had divided himself and his untiring flow of mischief between the two prettiest girls in Barrington. What one did not think of the other did.

The laughter in their eyes was enough to upset the gravity of judge and jury, and although they graduated brilliantly, leaving their schoolmates far behind, yet at nineteen their spirits were as untamed and intractable as they had been at the early age of twelve.

Kate Ashton was a brunette, and Nelly Marlowe a blonde, and they were never quite contented when apart from each other.

"I do not believe there is such another pair of rogues in town," Kate's father said to Mr. Marlowe. "We may be thankful if they do not steal."

"They will probably marry and settle down," was the consoling rejoinder.

But that did not seem likely, for if one attracted the attention of some sighing youth, the other ridiculed him so mercilessly that sentiment was quite out of the question.

But finally they tried the patience of their parents beyond all endurance, and were punished accordingly.

Having taken a dislike to a certain woman in the neighborhood for some trivial grievance, they did what they sadly regretted afterward, because, although mischievous they were not malicious.

But they caused the notice of her death to be published in the papers, producing an excitement and commotion that fairly exasperated their parents, and the sentence of banishment was passed.

It was in the month of June, and they had made elaborate preparations for a trip to Newport, Saratoga and other fashionable resorts.

"Now," said Kate's father, "Mr. Marlowe and I have decided to send you in the country for the whole summer, and perhaps when you return you will be able to behave yourselves with some degree of propriety."

"You treat us," answered the sobbing girl, "as if we were children ten years old."

"When young women of nineteen behave like children of ten, they have to be treated in the same way. You will go to-morrow."

"How do you feel?" Kate asked Nelly as they seated themselves in the cars the next day, with somewhat disconsolate faces. "Is the spirit of repentance working within you?"

"It is not working the least bit in the world, and if I could think of something perfectly awful to do, I would do it. There!"

"We shall be sure to have an opportunity when we reach that old farmhouse, and I absolutely long to do something shocking."

But they had been at the "old farmhouse" several weeks before that opportunity presented itself. The farmer and his wife were so kind and indulgent that Kate and Nelly had not the heart to annoy them. But they were gratified at last most unexpectedly. One of the farmer's sons was a peddler, who drove around to the neighboring families, selling the numerous articles that no house can do without. The girls had seen him come and go with absolute indifference, until one day Kate seized her coadjutor excitedly by the arm.

"Oh, Nell!" she cried. "I have it now."

"Have what?" was the wondering inquiry.

"An idea, of course."

"Does it hurt, Kate?"

"Not a bit, you dull, irresponsive creature. Why do you not ask what it is?"

"What is is, then?"

"Let us borrow the peddler's wagon, and go about the country selling thread, needles, egg beaters, etc."

"Kate, you are a genius, and I bow in humble admiration before you!"

"Stop your nonsense, and we will coax Jim at once to let us do it."

"Do you think he will object?"

"Of course he will at first, but we must look our prettiest and smile our sweetest—in fact, bring the full battery of our charms to bear upon his unsophisticated heart."

"He never will be able to resist us both at once. That would be impossible. And here he comes."

"Oh, Mr. Leonard," Kate said, in her most honied accents, "will you grant us a favor?"

"Certainly, young ladies," he answered, bowing awkwardly. "I'll do anything I can for you."

"Will you let us take your wagon and go in your place? Of course we will give you all the money, and it would be such fun."

"You two young ladies drive my cart!" he said. "I guess you're joking."

"No, indeed, we are not joking, we mean it."

"Don't you think you'd get scared?"

"Scared! How?"

"Some of the roads are dreadful lonesome, and there are lots of tramps these days."

"We will take one of the dogs. Can we have Bruno? He can sit between us."

"Yes. He goes with me sometimes, and likes it first-rate."

"We have each got a pistol, too."

"Can you use them?"

"Use them! Indeed we can."

And so it was decided.

The next morning they dressed themselves in their plainest clothes, but even then their fashionable and elegant appearance was little in keeping with the equipage they mounted so exultantly.

The owner looked after them with an amused grin upon his face.

"Them two girls beat all creation in the shape of women," he said.

The trio pursued their way in great glee, for Bruno looked as if he understood and fully appreciated the escapade—and most certainly he did the caresses lavished upon him, as he sat with imposing dignity between the two girls.

They stopped at several houses and sold quite a number of articles, for the people all flocked to the doors when they saw the handsome, laughing peddlers drive into the yard.

They were in the highest state of exhilaration until about the middle of the day, when, alas! a change came o'er the spirit of their dream.

They had reached one of the dreadful lonely roads, and were laughing and congratulating each other on their success, when Nelly stopped suddenly, turning very pale. "Oh, Kate," she exclaimed, "there are three horrible looking tramps! What shall we do?"

"But what shall we do if they attack us?"

"Get your pistol out quietly with your right hand and take the reins in your left. I have my pistol, but I must hold Bruno, for he is showing his teeth already. Be quiet, sir. We will keep right on, and perhaps they will not try to molest us. If they do we are ready for them. Keep still, Bruno!"

"Kate, dear, you are sublime. But I am a contemptible little coward. My teeth are absolutely chattering."

"Remember, Nell, that if you do not preserve your presence of mind, we are lost, for I cannot do everything. You must help me."

"I will try to," was the pitiful response. And then the villainous-looking men came toward them and stopped their horses.

"Go on at once," Kate cried, assuming the air of a dauntless young Amazon, as she pointed the pistol directly in the face of the man nearest to her, while Nelly followed suit, and Bruno growled fiercely. "You had better go on," she said, "for I cannot hold the dog much longer, and as sure as he releases himself, one of you will be killed. And we are not afraid to shoot, either, if we are girls."

Then the two girls stood up in the wagon and kept their pistols aimed until the greatly astonished tramps turned a corner and were out of sight.

Just as they disappeared, Nelly said: "Oh, Kate, I am so sick! I shall surely faint away."

"Oh, don't, don't, Nelly!" was the beseeching rejoinder. "What shall I do? I cannot hold you and Bruno, too. Stop fainting, for mercy's sake, stop fainting! Oh! she will do it in spite of everything," Kate exclaimed despairingly, as the poor girl fell limp and lifeless against her shoulder. "And there goes Bruno!"—for he had broken away, and, leaping from the wagon, seemed determined to pursue the tramps. "Come back," she called, "come back! You will be killed by those wretches if you go after them. Ah! there is a buggy with a blessed man in it—and, I do believe, a gentleman. I never in all my life was so glad to see a man before!"

She watched the approaching buggy with a bright color flushing her white face, as the occupant noticed and regarded her with eyes of admiration and amazement.

"Oh, sir," she cried, "will you please help me?"

"Indeed I will," he replied, jumping at once from his buggy. "Has the young lady fainted?"

"Yes, she would faint, in spite of all I can say or do."

"It was very inconsiderate in her. Was she frightened?"

"Yes. Three horrible tramps frightened us both."

"But you did not faint."

"How could I when she did?"

"True, enough. But I will lift her from your wagon, shall I not?"

"It is not ours, we just took it for a—a——"

"Lark?"

"Yes—thank you! the truth is, we have been awfully wild girls, and so were banished to the country. All our dresses made for Newport and Saratoga, too."

"But how did you get rid of the tramps?"

"We had a big dog between us, and we pointed our pistols at them till they left."

"You are brave girls."

"But it proved a little too much for Nell."

"Are you staying near here?"

"At Farmer Leonard's, and this is his son's wagon. We coaxed him to let us take it, but I think we are cured now of all our wicked, wicked ways. Is it not true, Nell?" she asked, as the latter opened her big, frightened eyes.

"Have they gone, Kate?" the poor girl inquired piteously.

"Yes, dear. But we have a protector now, and——Oh, there comes dear old Bruno! You naughty dog to run away and desert us!"

Then she hugged him so tenderly for his naughtiness that the young man wished himself an erring canine also.

"Kate," Nelly said languidly, "let us reform!"

And the new acquaintance, who had for some time restrained a keen desire to laugh, now gave way to a burst of merriment so irresistible that Kate had to join in the ringing chorus.

Then Nelly raised her head from her friend's lap and regarded them with an expression of solemn reproach.

"I do not know who you are," she finally said, as she addressed the stranger, "but you certainly are very unkind."

"I am Arthur Linton," he replied.

"And you are mistaken, Nell," Kate added, "for he has been very kind indeed; and he is going to see us home. Aren't you?" she asked, with a confiding smile that would have melted the sternest heart.

"I shall be delighted to do so," he replied.

"We will go back at once," Kate said, "but we must have an excuse, for this adventure is to remain a secret between us three. Oh, you are sick, aren't you, Nelly?"

"Yes, but I am hungry—fearfully hungry!"

"Then we will eat, drink and be merry," the gay brunette declared, as she took a basket from the wagon, and soon spread out quite an appetizing lunch.

"I never enjoyed a meal so much before," the stranger said, as he finished eating. "By the way, did you make any sales?"

"Six egg-beaters, five can-openers, ten spools of cotton, eight tin pans, etc.," cried Kate, triumphantly.

"Have you any handkerchiefs, or neckties?"

"Yes, indeed, but the first are course as milk strainers, and the last gorgeous as a garden of hollyhocks and sunflowers in bloom."

"No matter. I will take a dozen handkerchiefs and six neckties."

"That is splendid. How Jim will open his eyes when I give him the money!"

And then they went home, where Nelly's pale face fully corroborated the story of her illness.

"Repentant sister," Kate said to her the next day, "I like Arthur Linton better than any man I ever saw, and not one word of ridicule shall I permit in regard to him. [illegible] [illegible] mens of nature's mechanisms she had formerly professed to believe them.

It is often said that the wildest girls make the most exemplary wives and mothers. Kate and Nelly proved no exception to the rule.

A SILENT WITNESS.

The Old Man Tells a Story About a Car Porter.

The drummer had just finished one of his unequaled stories, and a gray-haired man in the smoking compartment with him looked up as if he could tell a story himself if he were sufficiently urged.

"Go ahead with yours," suggested one of those sympathetic kind of men who know things intuitively.

"It isn't much," said the gray-haired man modestly.

"That's what the boy said when he was looking for the definition of the word 'paucity.' But that's all right. Give us the story," replied the intuitive person.

"Well," said the man, straightening up, "some years ago, when in a certain section of the West the sleeping car was yet a novelty, they had a white man on one of our roads for a porter. He was a mean fellow and had a way of domineering around that wasn't pleasant. He was a coward, though, and was afraid of a man that met him face to face. One night I got on at the town where I lived, and this porter was uglier than usual, so ugly in fact that I pulled a gun on him, and at the muzzle of it I chased him up and down and kicked him from one end of the car to the other. There were eight or ten passengers in the car with me, and by midnight, when the porter was about half drunk and we were ready to go to bed, they advised me to watch him, as he would probably try to get even by some underhand method. I laughed it off and said I wasn't afraid, but just the same while the porter was dozing in a seat in the corner I fixed up a dummy to take my lower berth, and I got into a vacant upper on the other side of the car. The next morning about 6 o'clock I was aroused by some one calling for the porter, but no porter answered.

"'He's dead drunk out there in the smoker,' I said, sticking my head through the curtains.

"'I guess I'll go and see,' said the inquirer, and I got up, too.

"We found two or three of our party ahead of us.

"'Hello!' said one to me, 'did you have any trouble with the porter in the night?'

"'Of course not,' I said, 'where is he?'

"'Don't know; thought maybe you had thrown him off the car.'

"But I hadn't, and then we began to look for him, and the conductor appeared and he couldn't tell us anything, either. Then an idea occurred to me.

"'Wait a minute,' I said, and went back to the berth the porter had made down for me, and, throwing open the curtains, I found my dummy covered up comfortably just as I had left it, but driven clear through it, right where the heart ought to be, was a knife at least twelve inches long in the blade.

"Then I called in the crowd.

"'There,' I said, 'do you see the hilt of that knife? I'll give $500 to know where the porter is.'

"The crowd stood aghast for a minute, but nobody claimed the $500, and that porter was never heard of again."—Detroit Free Press.

ARTIFICIAL GEMS.

How They Are Made to Look Like the Real Ones.

The manufacture of artificial gems has become an important industry. The making of artificial diamonds especially involves extreme care and nicety. A paste is made of about 50 per cent of rock crystal, 22 per cent of carbonate of soda and due proportions of calcined borax, saltpetre and red lead. These, after being reduced to the finest powder, are mixed, fused together by heat in a crucible and cooled slowly. Thus made it is ready to be cut into diamonds and prepared for market.

If rubies are wanted a small quantity of peroxide of manganese and a trace of Cassius purple, are fused in with the paste to give the proper color. For emeralds, iron is incorporated, and for sapphires, oxide of cobalt. Topaz is formed in the crucible by mixing 1,000 parts of paste, 40 parts of glass of antimony and one part of Cassius purple, and other gems are made by methods equally simple.

The elements of which the various gems are composed are well known to chemists, and in the manufacture of artificial precious stones the attempt is made to imitate nature as nearly as possible, by combining the ingredients and effecting crystallization in the laboratory. But imitation stones have not the chemical construction, hardness, specific gravity nor optical properties of real gems, and their spurious character is readily perceived by an expert.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

FASHIONS IN NAMES.

No Longer Parted in the Middle, but Written Out in Full.

Every one must have noticed the recent change of fashion in regard to writing names. It used to be that only the initial of the middle name was given, as George G. Tulkinghorn or Emily M. Jones; now it must be written George Grimshaw Tulkinghorn and Emily Mackintosh Jones. The idea seems to be that it is somehow important to preserve Mr. Tulkinghorn's and Miss Jones' identity by completely differentiating them from other persons of the same name, or perhaps it is intended as notice to the world that they are the sole proprietors of a middle name which belongs to them exclusively.

All authors nowadays give their full names on the title page of their works. It is no longer John D. Smith, but John Dillingworth Smith, as much as to say that the Smith's are connected with the Dillingworths. Perhaps John's mother's maiden name was Dillingworth, or maybe his grandmother, if he had one, was a Dillingworth before she was married. Probably the world does not care any more about the Dillingworths than it does about the Smiths, but it looks fine to write the name out in full. We venture the assertion that of a thousand novels published during the last year, nine hundred and ninety-nine have the name of the author spelled out on the title page in full [illegible]

DOWN MOUNT HAMILTON AT NIGHT.

A Thrilling Stage Coach Ride at Full Speed, Turning Many Sharp Curves.

It was late when we left the building and began the downward trip, says a writer in the Californian. It was so dark that I determined to ride down as far as Smith's, making the start from there afresh in the morning. The coach I happened to catch contained a party of excursionists. The road down from the summit is, in all probability, the finest cut road in the world, but it is steep, abounds in sharp turns and terrific precipices, and is not a road one would select to go down at full speed. Yet when the four-in-hand turned down into the road, the driver mashed his hat firmly on his head and brought a crack from his whip like a report of a revolver, at which the horses sprang forward in a mad gallop. Crack came the whip again, and with a terrific sway the heavy coach swung round the curve and went tearing down the road while fitful shrieks began to come from the "insides." Trees, spectral trunks, great oaks and sycamores flew by, clouds of dust rose and hid the landscape so that the horses seemed rushing into a fog bank. Over bridges we went, the thunder of hoofs rising in the night with a wierd and forbidding sound. The pace kept increasing; the horses were at a dead run, sweeping round curves with a frightful swing now coming up under the brake with a terrible crash, then tearing madly on in the wild race for the lights of Smith's away below in the gloom. Great trees with long branching arms reached out, seeming to intercept the road. Gulfs of gloom opened up suddenly as the coach dashed around curves. Spectral sycamores stood white and distinct, where on every side masses of verdure made the night more impenetrable—a black gulf all about, down which they seemed skurrying. On plunged the coach—horses and driver seemingly gone mad—until finally, after pivoting around in a remarkable manner, we rushed away in a cloud of dust over the little bridge into the blending and welcome light of Smith's inn.

A report reached Royalton from the town of Morrill, eighteen miles east of here, that the whole country is literally alive with caterpillars, or a species of small worms resembling the ordinary caterpillars. They eat the green leaves from the trees, and have stripped the woods bare for miles around. The leaves on the basswood are eaten first, and after that every green leaf on tree and twig. Thus far all kinds of grain and garden stuff have been spared.

FLOORED BUT ONCE.

But That Time Got a Knock Down Blow.

Gov. Porter tells a good story on Col. "Dick" Wintersmith, one of the best known characters around Washington, and a Kentuckian by birth. Col. Wintersmith is a most congenial companion, tells a good story as well as any one, and is brilliant in repartee. "I never knew him to be turned down but once," said Gov. Porter. "Mike Cluskey was the man who did it. Cluskey was editor of the Memphis Avalanche at the breaking out of the war, but thinking the sword mightier than the pen laid down the latter for the former. He was elected to the Confederate congress at Richmond, and served as a member until the war was over. After peace had been declared, he was making his way back to Tennessee and stopped at Louisville, Ky. Col. Wintersmith had returned from the army also, and having lost his fortune by the war was living in Louisville with a wealthy sister-in-law, who was a widow. Col. Wintersmith was at home there, and had everything at his disposal as if it had been his own. He lived in elegance.

"When Maj. Cluskey reached Louisville Col. Wintersmith took him to his 'home,' knew that his old comrade was 'busted,' and told him to make this place his home as long as he liked. Maj. Cluskey accepted. About two or three months after he had been a guest the major and his hostess got in a carriage, drove around to the home of a priest and were married. Col. Wintersmith heard of it and rushed after them to find out what it meant. Maj. Cluskey, in his most gallant manner, replied: 'It means, colonel, that I am the host, you the guest, and so long as you make yourself agreeable we will be glad to have you remain with us.'

"It was the only time I ever saw Dick floored, but he was completely knocked out that time. I have seen Dick since then, however, get even by taking Senator Joe Blackburn to a standstill."

BAD ENOUGH AT THAT

REPORTS FROM THE FIRE-SWEPT TOWNS OF MINNESOTA.

Virginia and Merritt the Only Towns That Have Seriously Suffered, Previous Reports Having Been Exaggerated—The Loss Heavy.

Duluth, June 20.—The first accurate news of the fires in the Mesaba range has been received. The only communication with the range towns yesterday was over a single wire and that working badly. Dispatches filed by the special correspondents who were sent with the first relief-train did not arrive until late to-day. Accurate news shows the usual exaggeration in the first reports, but the money loss will be greater than estimated yesterday. The first stories regarding Mountain Iron and Biwabik were untrue. At Biwabik only a few detached buildings were burned, and at Mountain Iron only six buildings. At Virginia the situation is as serious as reported. The entire business portion of the town is destroyed. About thirty houses are standing and 340 were burned. The loss here will be $1,000,000. Merritt is nearly wiped out, only sixteen buildings now remaining in the town. It was impossible to reach Merritt to-day, as the woods are still burning all about the village. It was the only town the newspaper men were not able to visit and see the exact situation for themselves. The condition of the sufferers at Virginia is particularly unfortunate. Most of them are without shelter, clothing is scarce and food, despite the supplies that have been sent from Duluth, is still scanty. At a citizens' meeting to-day a general relief committee was appointed, and it was decided not to appeal for outside aid. Between $5,000 and $6,000 has been subscribed for the work of relief and clothing, and provisions are coming in on every hand. The city and county have each appropriated $1,000 to aid in the work. It will be put at the disposition of the relief committee. Several hundred refugees have arrived here. One life was probably lost at Virginia.

SHUT OUT OF ST. PAUL.

Chicago, June 20.—The Great Northern has refused to honor Canadian Pacific tickets, thus barring the latter from its St. Paul outlet. This injects another interesting and prospectively disturbing element into the Northwestern passenger rate complication. The Canadian Pacific has heretofore routed its St. Paul, Chicago and Central States passengers over the Great Northern from Gretna, sixty miles from Winnipeg and 418 miles from St. Paul. Hereafter Canadian Pacific passengers must rebuy their tickets from Gretna.

ATTEMPTED MURDER.

Moscow, Idaho, June 20.—An attempt was made this morning by Mike H. Leitch of Pullman, Wash., to kill Robert S. Browne, the president of the Moscow national bank. Leitch is indebted to the bank, and after talking to Browne started to go out, but suddenly turned and fired through the screen over the cashier's desk. The bullet struck the bar of a screen and glanced over Mr. Browne's shoulder, hitting him in the neck. Leitch was immediately disarmed by bystanders and arrested.

FATAL RIOT.

Brene, June 20. — About fifty Swiss workingmen attacked a gang of Italians who had been imported to work in the streets. The police interfered, arrested fifteen of the attacking party and locked them up. A turbulent crowd gathered in a street near the jail. When the police tried to disperse them the men made a rush for the jail to release the prisoners. The police fired upon the rioters, but were unable to drive them back until fourteen had been killed and forty wounded.

MADE OTHERS ASSIGN.

Boston, June 20.—The Little Kanawha Lumber company, a Maine corporation with a capital stock of $500,000 with $347,000 actually paid in, is in financial difficulties and has been placed in the hands of a receiver. The assets are $1,100,000; liabilities, $785,000. On account of the failure of the company the firms of Andrew E. Lefebre, William F. Leatherbee & Sons and the Taunton Lumber company have assigned.

ROUGH ON RATS.

Leavenworth, Kan., June 20.—The body of Benjamin Beyer, a well known citizen of Leavenworth, was found near the Missouri Pacific freight house late this afternoon. FOR A PINT OF BEER.

New York, June 20.—A typical Cherry Hill tough, John J. Haggerty, jumped from the Brooklyn bridge into the river this afternoon on a wager of a pint of beer. He was not injured in the slightest way. Haggerty was drunk when he accomplished the feat and was in the same condition when taken from the water a few minutes after his great leap.

YANKTON COLLEGE.

Yankton, S. D., June 20.—Yankton college, a Congregational institution located in this city, has succeeded in raising $75,000, thereby securing the first installment of the gift of Dr. D. K. Pearsons, the Chicago philanthropist, who offered a year ago to endow Yankton college in the sum of $50,000 providing donations amounting to $150,000 were raised. He subsequently modified the conditions of his endowment and said that if $75,000 were raised he would deliver one-half his gift, $25,000, leaving the remaining $75,000 for future efforts, and offered to give one dollar for every three raised by the friends of the college. Dr. Pearsons' $25,000 will be expended in the construction of Ward hall of sciences, for which ground will be broken to-morrow.

AFTER THE TRUST.

Peoria, Ill., June 20.—The rebate system of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding company is to be attacked, for within the next few days the firm of W. W. Johnson & Co. of Cincinnati will bring suit for the recovery of the amount due them and their customers on rebates which the trust declare has been forfeited. Johnson & Co. are the firm recently dropped by the trust from its list of customers. Certain Peoria distillers are assisting the attorney general in his suit. They are giving him information, and it is expected some of them may be used when the quo warranto case against the trust comes up.

MURDERED OR DROWNED.

Benica, Cal., June 20.—Arthur Yerke and Charles Trimmer, young Englishmen in the fishing business near here, have disappeared and are thought to be murdered or drowned. Yerke last Monday had a row with one Greggario Aleck, a fisherman. With Trimmer he started to Benicia in a fishing boat to have Aleck arrested. Aleck has also left, and fishermen here are of the opinion that he followed made away with Trimmer and Yerke.

Burnside of Sioux Falls presiding. Nearly all the grand officers are present, also Sir Knights from all parts of South Dakota and neighboring states. A grand banquet, exclusively for Sir Knights and their ladies, was served.

BURGLARS CAPTURED.

Natrona, Pa., June 20.—W. P. Disert, a Philadelphia burglar, held 100 armed men at bay all night at Cheswick, Pa., and only surrendered when fifty determined men burst in the doors of the building he was in and overpowered him. For ten hours a steady fire was kept up on both sides, and when captured, one of the robber's eyes had been shot out and his left arm disabled by a bullet. Disert is supposed to have been implicated in fifty robberies in Western Pennsylvania during the past two weeks.

FROM THE POPE.

London, June 20.—A dispatch from Rome states that the pope in conversation with a number of church dignitaries to-day freely expressed his approval of the attitude of Mgr. Satolli, the papal ablegate to the United States, on the scholastic question in America. The pope declared that the letters he sent to Cardinal Gibbons, Archbishop Ireland and the other American archbishops only explain the scholastic policy and state that he desires its continuance.

TOOK LAUDANUM.

Chicago, June 20.—H. D. Church of Charleston, W. Va., committed suicide in his room in Gore's hotel early this morning by taking laudanum. On an envelope found on the washstand was written: "A case of sickness." The people at the hotel state that so far as they know Church had made no complaint of being ill, nor did he leave anything behind explaining his rash act.

NOT A CRIMINAL CASE.

Chamberlain, S. D., June 20.—The term of court held in Charles Mix county last week was the first to be held in two years in that county, which is a remarkable record when it is considered that the county is on the frontier and has a population of about 5,000 people. There was not a single criminal case to be tried, while there were but few civil cases. The county jail has not a single occupant.

WALKER ARRESTED

HE IS TAKEN IN CHARGE BY THE DEPUTY MARSHAL.

Indians at Leech Lake Quiet Down on the Arrival of Troops, Whose Arrival Prevents a Possible Massacre of Whites.

Brainerd, Minn., June 17.—The Indians on the Leech Lake reservation have been quieted, and that without the assistance of the troops called from Fort Snelling for that purpose. The party, composed of Company D, commanded by Lieut. McCoy, Indian Agent Ruffee and Deputy Marshal Sheehan, arrived at the agency Thursday afternoon. Everything is now quiet, and Dr. Walker is a happier man, although under arrest, charged with assault with intent to kill. The Indians asked that he be allowed to remain at the agency until the wounded Indian recovered or died, and the request was granted by Marshal Sheehan. Evidence is being collected by the Indians, who are desirous of showing that Walker intended to shoot the fellow.

It is a small but happy lot of white people that last evening greeted the troops on their arrival, and for the first time in five days they were free from their fears of death and being scalped. The troops had moved forward rapidly, considering the oppressive heat and the millions of mosquitoes that filled every inch of the air. When Lieut. McCoy arrived within about fifteen miles of the agency he threw out pickets and flankers, and for the remainder of the trip all were on the alert. Maj. Ruffee and Col. Sheehan preceded the company a few miles, and when the latter arrived they found the Indians apparently in an amicable state of mind, though underneath there lurked a smouldering fire. The Indians had learned of the approach of the soldiers, and had removed their pickets and guards over Dr. Walker.

The trouble began last Saturday, when the doctor confiscated a considerable amount of whisky and captured the men who had it. His story is corroborated by many persons both white and red. He was under surveillance for five days and at times when the Indians became more demonstrative despaired of his life. They were constantly getting bolder as they saw they had the doctor under control and were fairly swimming in whisky. The arrival of the troops was opportune, as several of the cooler headed Indians admitted yesterday. If the troops had been two or three days later Walker might have been killed. As soon as it was learned that the troops were on the reservation most of the turbulent warriors left for remote parts.

RECEIVER FOR THE GLOBE.

St. Paul, June 17.—The St. Paul Globe has been placed in the hands of a receiver. The suit filed by the St. Paul Trust company, as executor of the Kittson estate, has terminated abruptly and in a manner satisfactory to all parties concerned. The case promised to be a long and disastrous piece of litigation, judging by the determined attitude shown by the old company, but when the representatives of both sides came together on Thursday it was made apparent that the wisest course to pursue was to agree to the appointment of a receiver. Judge Otis appointed Judge Charles E. Flandrau as receiver, and that gentleman at once filed a bond in the sum of $200,000, with Wm. R. Merriam and William Dawson as sureties.

SMALL CYCLONE.

Forest River, S.D., June 17.—A cyclone in miniature passed over town. A mile east of us the groves of Thomas Scott and Henry Warren were badly torn up and several panes of glass broken in both houses. A quantity of hail fell and flattened the growing grain. One young man was blown from a wagon and several others made escapes. None are seriously injured. If the storm had struck the town much damage would have resulted.

OWING TO A STRIKE.

Pittsburg, Kan., June 17.—W. and J. Lanyon announced to-day that they would be compelled to shut down one block of their smelters next Wednesday if the strike should not be settled satisfactory then, and when once shut down it would be at least ninety days before they could be repaired and fired up again. The Cherokee Zinc company will also shut down four blocks and the works at Weir City will be shut down and probably removed to St. Louis.

The viking ship, which cut her way into port this week with her dragon-headed prow, is receiving more comment and praise than the Columbian caravels. Not only is this due to the fact that the ship is a copy of the viking vessels of the tenth century and their connection with the Norse discovery of America, but it is because this craft is coming just Leif Ericksen's did, manned by the hardy seamen of the North. At New York the crew will be received and feted like the heroes that they are.

The captain of these modern vikings of 80 men good and true is Capt. Magnus Anderson, This intrepid sailor is only 36 years old; but he has been a sailor since his fifteenth year, It was he who originated the idea of reproducing the viking ship for exhibition at Chicago. In 1886 he crossed the ocean in a 10-foot long row boat, reaching Newfoundland after a rough and hazardous voyage. he afterwards founded and edited the Norwegian Sailors' News in Brooklyn N. Y.

The crew have had more hardships than they would have had to endure if they were on the modern sailing vessel but they have enjoyed the trip nevertheless because it was risky. This is a trait of the northern sailor. He is daring yet a careful sailor. Capt, Anderson thought, no doubt, it was too much of a farce to have the vessel forced by steam and what the old vikings had done could be done again—Dispatch.

The executive officers of 30 state World's Fair boards have issued an address to the people to the effect that the fair is now complete; that charges of extortion are unfounded; that comfortable accommodations and good meals can be obtained at reasonable prices and that the show is one that should not be missed by anybody able to spare the money necessary to visit it. It is unfortunate that this proclamation was rendered necessary by the impositions practiced during the earlier stages of the exposition. It is certainly the grandest show the world has ever seen and the people should be given a chance to see it without danger of bankruptcy, The proclamation is reassuring.—Tribune.

In an interview with Mr. McGuire, of the land office, he said: "It will be in my estimation, at least two or three years before the reservation is thrown open for settlement. But there is a heavily timbered tract east of the reservation which, according to a timber act, is purchasable from the government at $2 50 cents per acre without residence. And if the timber is what it is claimed to be, a man who invests in a claim and is lucky enough to get a good one, should clear at least $1,500 on the investment and in some cases $1,500 on the forty should be realized." —Crookston Times.

The populists are proudly pointing to President Cleveland's announcement of his intention to call an extra session of Congress to deal with the financial situation which he says is "the only menace to the country's welfare and prosperity" as a vindication of the position they took in the last presidential campaign that the only real issue before the country was involved in the money question. They say that the great campaign was won and lost on side issues, both the republicans and democrats having practically ignored the question of finance which the populists made the corneistone of their campaign, It does seem a little queer that Mr. Cleveland should not have mentioned the tariff in saying what the extra session will be called upon to do.—Polk County Review (Rep.)

Village Recorder,

It is to some extent excusable in the youthful members of the community to say that Monday and Tuesday were hot days. But we older ones betray a lamentable weakness of memory if we call 104 in the shade hot. Now in '56 after that hard winter there was some really warm weather along through June and July. People got so they wore overcoats on such days as compared with last Monday. Many of our readers will readily recall with us how it was in '49, also, when the blacksmiths were kept busy day and night for several weeks putting extensions to the tops of the thermometers belonging to those who wished to keep a reliable record of the temperature. It is all right for young folks to talk about hot weather, but we don't have it the way it used to be in the good old days.—Stephen Lender,

The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First-class from $60.00 to to Spokane from $36 to $30; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

Took Time by the Forelock.

The funniest after-election story is told by Representative Hopkins, of Illinois. In his district is the little crossroads post-office of Ivanhoe, over which in Cleveland's administration, a German democrat presided. When President Harrison came into power Mr. Hopkins had the democrat succeeded by a Teutonic republican, who died about a year and a half ago. His wife was thereupon appointed postmistress. On the day after election the German democrat appeared at the postoffice. "Cleveland has won," he said, with accents of the fatherland and of triumph delightfully mixed, "The post-office is mine." The widow, knowing that Cleveland had been elected, and unsuspectingly believing that her official career was ended, did not object when her predecessor brought a big wagon and carted the entire contents of the post-office over to his store. He has been acting as postmaster ever since. Mr. Hopkins reported the facts to the post-office department, and an inspector was speedily sent to convince the enterprising democrat of the error of his way.

TALMAGE IS SERENE.

Stories Told About the Divine Do Not Disturb His Equanimity.

Probably no man in what may be called public life preserves his equanimity so perfectly when stories about him, with absolutely no foundation whatever, appear in the public prints as does Dr. Talmage.

Two weeks ago a dispatch from Massachusetts announced that the reverend gentleman had purchased a blooded pup, of most approved fighting qualities, and although the story was entirely erroneous, no one laughed more heartily at the idea of a clergyman's investing in a canine prizefighter than the pastor of the tabernacle.

Apropos of this story the doctor told of another experience of his, which evidently amused him greatly, though some men would have been annoyed by it.

"I remember," he said, "some years ago when I left home for the summer one of the Brooklyn newspapers came out with a long story about how glad the neighbors were to get me out of the way for a few weeks. According to the story, I had purchased a cornet, and life had been rendered almost unendurable upon my block by the doleful sounds which I expelled from the instrument, often until late at night. I don't remember," added the doctor, laughing heartily, "that I ever had a cornet in my hand. Certainly it never occurred to me to buy one, or to try to play one."

A Slight Misunderstanding.

He had just received a letter from his son at college and was reading it aloud to his family, when he came to this passage:

"I am taking lessons in fencing and as the fee must be paid in advance will need another remittance."

"Wa'al, now, that do beat all," said the old man, "what on airth does anybody need to take lessons in fencing for, I'd like to know? I've been fencing for forty years and never had to go to college to learn how."

"But times have changed, father," said his wife; "fences ain't made as they used to was when we clim them in Root Hollow."

"That's so," said the old man. "Ed don't say ef it's a wire fence or a rail one, but I reckon he'll larn both ways. But I vum, I never expected a boy of mine would hev to go to college to learn fencing. It do seem queer."

Then he wrote out another check and forwarded it by the next mail.—Denver News.

Sitting Down on Him.

A rather loudly-dressed "gentleman" stepped into the necktie department the other afternoon and, in a supercilious tone that would have nettled a graven image into anger, uttered the single mandatory word, "Neckties!" and then drew back his head as if the clerk was entirely beneath his notice. The top-lofty air aggravated the salesman, but he quietly displayed a number of late patterns with a deferential air. "These," said he, obsequiously, "are the very newest things, and are excellent quality at twenty-five cents——" "Twenty-five cents!" haughtily snapped the customer. "Twenty-five cents! Do I look like a man who would wear a twenty-five cent necktie? Say, do I look like a twenty-five cent dude? Is there anything about me to indicate that I——" "I beg your pardon," meekly interposed the clerk, but with a snap in the corner of his cold gray eye, "the ten cent counter is at the other end of the room."—New York Commercial Advertiser.

A Rude Awakening.

He was a dreamy romantic young fellow from Tacoma, and he was doing the fair thoroughly, entering into the spirit of the thing, so to speak, with all his ability. When the purple shades of twilight were falling he stepped gayly into a picturesque gondola, adorned and propelled by a real, live gondolier attired in blue and white, with every detail of the Venetian costume complete. Our westerner reveled in the charm of the hour and the surroundings. He threw himself into the spirit of ancient Venice and fancied he saw the bride of the Adriatic lying ghostlike upon the sunlit-tinted waters. With a woman's artifice he tried to tempt the gondolier into song. It was in vain, however, for the solitary boatman at the stern was evidently thinking of his beloved Venice. The young man from Tacoma at last sought terra firma and as he soared, rather than walked away, he heard with horror the mystical gondolier distinctly remark to his fellow in the bow:

"Oi say, Moike, lind me a match, plase."—Chicago Mail.

HESTER'S LOVERS.

"To think I have a sister, Roy, and she is coming to-day," and Hester Leighton raised her clear, soft eyes to her lover's handsome face.

She was hardly a pretty girl, this Hester Leighton, but she gave promise of being more than pretty in the future, for as yet she was barely seventeen, a shy, pale girl, whose principal charm lay in her girlish innocence and tender eyes.

"When do you expect her?" Roy Beldon said, "this unknown sister, Hester, for whom you are preparing such a welcome."

"To-day—any time. To think that papa had a wife before mamma—a wife who only lived one short year—a little daughter before me, whose face he never saw."

"He cannot have been gifted with very strong parental affection," Roy said.

"Oh! you don't understand. He thought the baby died with its mother. It seems her sister lost a baby, and took papa's little one in its stead, and kept the secret up till papa was dying and so——"

"So you have a new sister, when you least expected it. It was in sunny Spain your father's romance——"

"Oh, Roy, there is some one coming. It is she, and it is only kindness in me to meet her."

As she crossed the room, a faint tap sounded on the door, and opening it she smiled a welcome to the new-comer.

As the stranger came forward, she threw back the veil that shaded her face, and Hester almost started at the wondrous beauty her eyes rested upon.

"You are my sister?" Hester said, putting her soft, white arms around the stranger's neck, and laying her pure, girlish lips to the vivid crimson curves of the other's beautiful, smiling mouth. "Welcome to Suncliffe, welcome home."

Then Roy came forward and bent with haughty grace over Inez' slender hand, while his very soul seemed to drink in her beauty.

While they were standing there another gentleman crossed the piazza, and Hester flew to the window.

"Come in here, Deane. My sister has come, and I want you to welcome her."

The next moment Deane Stanley was welcoming the new-comer.

One hour later Inez stood before the mirror in the rooms allotted to her, looking at her own beautiful face, her thoughts reverting to Roy Belden and his look of passionate admiration.

"And he is the promised husband of that little dowdy pale-face; well"—with a faint laugh—"if ever he did love her, which I rather doubt, I can lure him from her, chain him to my side by the power of my beauty, and if Fate is kind, I will yet be mistress of his stately home."

If he ever loved her? This was a question Roy asked himself when he thought of Hester, as the days rolled on and he felt the power of Inez' midnight eyes and curving lips luring him on to madness. He had no thought at first of being false to Hester, but as the summer passed, he felt the power of Inez' siren loveliness, holding him in a thrall he could not break. Not that he tried very hard, for self-love was a gift the gods had not deprived him of, and so

"Red lips smiling, lured him on.
Bright eyes beaming, held his soul,
Till a languorous, dreamy spell
Bound his heart beyond control;
Till faith, and truth, and honor gone,
Till conquering passion stood alone
Where love had smiled before."

Hester watched it all with a strange, dull, aching pain at her tender heart that slowly turned to wonder and contempt. Was this her Bayard—her knight without fear or reproach—this wavering lover who had proved false to his troth?

She struggled bravely against the thought, and then—ah, then she could doubt no longer after the fatal day she stood beneath the drooping syringas in the old-fashioned garden below the western gable of the homestead.

She saw them together, Inez and Roy—saw him pleading for her love, almost kneeling before her in the passion of the moment, and then—nay, she was not mad nor dreaming!—Roy had taken Inez in his arms, kissing the creamy palor of her face, the curving crimson of her lips, and calling her his darling, his beautiful one.

White as death, with a strange, deadly faintness stealing over her, Hester turned away. She had loved Roy Beldon, if not with a woman's deepest love, with all a girl's shy, sweet tenderness, and she had trusted him entirely—would have staked her very life on his honor and truth.

She turned up the pathway again. Suddenly a strange darkness seemed to envelop her, and dimly she saw Deane Stanley coming toward her—Deane Stanley who had been as a son to her father—a brother to herself.

His face paled as he saw her.

"Hester! Child! What is it?"

She made him no answer, only held out her hands like a tired child, and then, ere he could reach her swaying form, she sunk white and senseless at his feet.

He lifted her in his arms.

"My darling! My darling! Oh! the coward, but his punishment will be deep enough, or my name is not Deane Stanley."

The strange deadly faintness was only momentary, and coming to herself, Hester heard the passionate "darling" and felt the kisses that fell upon her hands, and realizing with a feeling of pain, a pain that yet thrilled her strangely, that not as friend or brother Deane Stanley loved her, but as man loves the one fair woman in all the world for him.

With all her gentleness, Hester Leighton was singularly proud, and with smiling lips and cold, haughty eyes she gave Roy Beldon his freedom. What if the pallor of her face was like death itself, her voice was serenely calm and cool.

One evening some months later, they were all in the music room together, Hester at the piano, her slender fingers running listlessly over the keys, Inez, radiant in her imperial beauty, resting in a low easy chair, with Roy Beldon lingering at her side.

Deane Stanley had been abroad on business, and he had just returned the day before, and now he stood leaning idly against the piano, a peculiar expression in his eyes, as they rested on Roy Beldon.

"Do you know, Roy," he said, "I am more generous than I ever deemed my self, for were I not, the story I am going to tell, would be untold, till after your wedding day."

Something in his voice had startled them from their composure, and Inez' beautiful face had grown strangely pale.

Suddenly Deane went over to her side.

"Confess the truth," he said, "and mercy will be shown you—confess you are not Inez Leighton, but the child of her mother's sister! That the changing of the children was a concoction of your own subtle brain—confess that the true Inez died in her infancy, and that you, having the proofs of her birth in your possession, usurped her place."

White as death Inez rose to her feet. There was no need to confess; the truth was written on her face.

She turned to Roy, with passionate, questioning eyes, but it seemed the glamor of her beauty had fallen from him, as he realized the truth, and he stepped back coldly.

"Is it true?" he said; "answer. Is it true?"

She looked at him with scornful eyes, then turned to Hester:

"What are you going to do?" she said.

"Nothing," Hester answered. "I will give you time to leave—time to go back to your own sunny land, before a word is spoken. We only know your sin—your own heart its temptation."

"You are generous," Inez said, looking at her with mocking eyes. "You even forgive me for stealing your love."

Without another word she turned and left the room, and none there ever looked at her beautiful face again.

Without glancing at Roy, Hester laid her hand on Deane's arm.

"Come out to the garden," she said. "I feel as if I were dying in here. Oh, Deane, you proved your suspicions true."

Next day a letter was placed in Hester's hand.

"I dare not ask you to forgive, but in the future you may look with less scornful eyes upon my madness, and this hope I take abroad with me,

—Roy."

Three years have passed—years in which Hester has passed from an unformed girl into a slender, graceful woman, with a face whose beauty would attract attention anywhere.

A polished woman of the world, the acknowledged belle and beauty of her set, she met Roy Beldon again.

If Roy had not loved her in the past, he certainly loved her now—the old passionate glamor with which a siren had enveloped him seemed a matter of self-contempt; but this was love, the best, the purest love he was capable of—and who can give more?

Deane Stanley watched it all with grave, proud eyes, and smiled when people spoke of them as lovers.

All his life he had loved Hester Leighton, but what had he to offer her? A loyal heart and willing hands to the heiress of Suncliffe!

One evening he sought her—sought her in the quiet stillness of the gloaming.

"I have come to say good-bye for awhile," he said; "business calls me away, and it may be years before I return."

Was he mistaken, or did the sweet face pale?

"We will miss you," she said.

"Who are we?" he said, perfectly unconscious of his rudeness in the passion and pain of the moment.

"Well, it is rather egotistical to think I could vouch for the feelings of others. I meant society in general and myself in particular, Deane."

He laughed bitterly.

"Well, Roy Beldon can console you now, Hester."

She looked at him with questioning eyes, and then a faint smile curved her lips.

"It would take a great many Roy Beldons to console me. Oh, Deane, Deane!" breaking down suddenly, a red flush sweeping her face.

"Hester, darling, do you mean——"

"I mean Roy Beldon asked me to be his wife, and I simply answered 'No.'"

"If I asked you, Hester, my darling——"

Whether he asked her then or not is only surmise, but one thing is sure, the gloaming fell around a pair of well contented lovers, and its shadows hid the passionate kisses of the lover who had won the purest, deepest love of Hester Leighton's tender heart.

How It Seemed.

When old Mr. Sawyer of Scramtown made his first visit to the city he saw and heard a great many new and strange things, but he was always wary in his comments.

One day his little granddaughter enticed him into a restaurant, and leading him to a small table, proceeded to order some eclairs, a delicacy of which she was extremely fond.

"I know you'll like them, grandpa," she said, coaxingly and the old gentleman bravely attacked the unfamiliar object.

"Isn't it delicious, grandpa?" inquired the little girl, seeing a strange expression come over her grandfather's face as he took his first mouthful.

"Well, I presume to say it may be," said Mr. Sawyer, in a non-committal tone, "but doesn't it appear to you to be jest a leetle mite under-baked in the middle?"

Multiplex Musical Instrument.

An unusually novel and ingenious device with the above title was patented some months since by Mr. J. H. Wheeler, of Saugatuck, Mich. A violin, in miniature form, is mounted on one end of a staff or rod. The opposite end is a flute or flagolet. Two French harps are inserted in the intermediate space, forming altogether a quartet of instruments which may be tuned and played in concert. The device can be made at a moderate cost, and in the hands of musicians of ordinary skill, is capable of producing effects which would not fail to "bring down the house" in a concert room or social assembly.

The Water Cycle.

The "hydro-cycle"—hitherto regarded as more or less a mechanical monstrosity—has at length proved its speed and capabilities. A wonderful performance in the novel vehicle has just been achieved by three well-known cyclists—Messrs. Cooper, Atkinson, and Bates. Accompanied by a steam launch, they left Goring-on-Thames the other morning, and pedalled down to Moulsey, a distance of sixty and a half miles, in ten hours ten minutes, or an average of six miles per hour. The trip was a preliminary training for a longer run from Oxford to London, which is 101 3-4 miles.—London Tit-Bits.

Mabel's Grandpa.

Mr. Bennet is a bright and well-preserved old gentleman, but to his little granddaughter, Mabel, he seems very old indeed.

She had been sitting on his knee and looking at him seriously for some moments one day, when she said, "Grandpa, were you in the ark?"

"Why, no, my dear!" gasped her astonished grandparent.

Mabel's eyes grew large and round with astonishment. "Then why weren't you drowned?" she asked.

A Question of Fitness.

It used to be the tedium of the barber-shop that made boys averse to having their hair cut. Now it seems that other motives are at work.

Visitor—Why do you feel so worried about your son? He isn't wild, is he?

Mother—Oh, no, it isn't that. But look at the splendid head of hair he has. We can't decide whether to educate him for a pianist or a foot-ball player.—Washington Star.

A BEAVER'S TEETH.

How Nature Makes a Chisel That Always Keeps Sharp.

As in every "gnawer" the beaver's skull is armed with two long, chisel-like teeth in each jaw, says a writer in St. Nicholas. These teeth are exceedingly powerful, and are, to a beaver what an ax is to a woodsman. One such tooth taken from the lower jaw of a medium-sized skull (they can be removed without difficulty, unlike the most of ours) is bent into nearly a semi-circle and measures five inches along its outer curve. Only one inch of this length projects from the skull. The corresponding one from the upper jaw is bent into more than a complete half circle and measures upon its outer face four inches, of which less than an inch protrudes from its bone casing. In width each tooth is five-eighths of an inch. Examination of one of them reveals the secret of how a beaver can perform such feats as chopping down a birch tree sixteen inches in diameter, not to speak of softer woods like the basswood, of much greater size. The tooth is composed of two materials. Along the outer face or front of the tooth is a thin plate of exceedingly hard enamel; on the inner, forming the body of the tooth, is a substance called dentine, being softer, wears away with use; the thin enamel remains comparatively unworn, so that the tooth assumes the shape of a keen chisel that never grows dull. The tooth is hollow at the base for half its length and is filled with a nourishing substance which keeps it constantly growing. Thus, not only is the natural wearing away provided against, but a certain amount of wear becomes an actual necessity. With such instruments the beaver is admirably fitted for obtaining its natural food, the bark of shrubs and trees.

Brightest Part of My Trip.

A New York fashion correspondent of a Southern paper gives out the following.

A lady writes: "I have read your letters for a long time, and have often envied you the opportunity you enjoy of seeing the beautiful things you describe. I used to think when I read of those charming dresses and parasols and hats at Lord & Taylor's, that theirs must be one of those stores where a timid, nervous woman like myself, having but a few dollars to spare for a season's outfit, would be of so little account that she would receive little attention; but when you said, in one of your letters a few months ago, that goods of the same quality were really cheaper there than elsewhere, because they sold more goods in their two stores than any other firm in New York, and that because they sold more they bought more, and consequently bought cheaper, I determined, if I ever went to New York, I would go to Lord & Taylor's.

"That long-waited-for time came in the early autumn, and I found myself standing before that great entrance, with those wonderful windows at either side. I summoned my courage and entered, as I suppose tens of thousands of just such timid women as I have done before. My fears were gone in an instant. The agreeable attention put me at my ease at once, and I felt as much at home as though I were in the little country store where my people have 'traded' for nearly a quarter of a century.

"And now, as I wear the pretty things I purchased, or see them every day and find them all so satisfactory, I think of my visit to this great store as the brightest part of my trip to New York."

A Portiere Made of Shells.

A lady who spends her summers at the seaside has collected about a bushel, more or less, of small, almost flat, thin, yellow shells, which abound at so many points on the coast. With these she this year fashioned a portiere that is novel and pretty beyond description. Each shell is pierced with a hot wire, and then strung on a delicate wire, so that the narrow end of one is next to the wide end of the other. A number of strings were made in this way long enough to reach from the floor to the curtain pole, where they were securely fastened to a strip of plantation cloth of the same shade as the shells. Through the fretwork above this curtain is draped a length of sea-green India silk, falling half way to the floor on the right side.

A less ambitious woman has made a curious scarf by sewing these shells in artistic confusion on either end of a length of Nile green silk, putting here and there among them bits of golden brown seaweed. A fringe is made for each end by stringing shells on green embroidery silk instead of wire.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

From the Cape to Cairo.

The business partner of one of the directors of the company formed to build the telegraph line from the Cape to Cairo has given a Pall Mall Gazette reporter some interesting information. Capital has been subscribed to the extent of $700,000, which is considered sufficient to carry the line as far as Uganda. The materials are now being ordered in London, and will be shipped shortly. The poles are to be of iron of light construction, in order to outmaneuver the white ants, who would eat away wooden poles. From Salisbury the line is to be carried to Tete, on the Zambesi, and from thence to Blantyre. There Consul Johnson will report the result of his surveys as to the best manner of proceeding on to Uganda, and the constructing party will have to come to terms with the natives and Arabs by subsidizing the chiefs and others of influence. There will be nothing in the way of impenetrable undergrowths or rank vegetation to contend with, as the line will avoid the low country and keep to the high plateau the entire distance.

A Dream Warning.

In 1877 a fireman was dismissed from service on the Baltimore & Ohio fast mail, Parkersburg to Grafton. While at work later in the oil region near Volcano he dreamed three nights in succession that his old engineer was going to have a wreck. He sent word to "Jack" about his dreams and warned him to be careful. The next day "Jack" had orders to meet a fast passenger coming west at Pennsboro. Instead of pulling up at the east end of the station to wait for the westbound to take the siding, "Jack" thought of his warning and stopped at the west end, a mile away. When the westbound train tried to stop at the east end the air brakes failed to work, and the train was stopped only twenty feet away from Jack's engine, after the terrible suspense of reversed engine, hissing steam, flying sand and whistle screaming for brakes. Jack's warning and subsequent precaution had saved an awful wreck.—St. Louis Republic.

A Loving Consort.

WEATHER LIARS.

Those of St. Louis Are Not Up to the Canadian Mark.

"Last week I was up in Canada," said Mr. E. H. Hagan, who was trying to hold down a batch of weather liars at the Leclede, according to the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, "and there I found it somewhat cool. The thermometer was down to about twenty degrees below zero, and the snow was from two to ten feet deep, while icicles reached from the eaves of ten-story buildings to the sidewalk, but, for all that, I might have left the land of the Canucks none the wiser for it being any colder than any other Canadian winter day had I not attempted to light my cigar on the street one day and the flame of the match was frozen solid before my eyes.

"I admit this somewhat startled me, and I began to look around a little. Soon I discovered that people were breathing hail stones. As the breath left the mouth or nostrils it was frozen into a round ball, which clattered to the pavement, and in a crowd sounded like a heavy sleet storm, and I learned that it was nothing unusual during the past few days for boiling water to be frozen two inches thick. This last I did not see, but had the story straight from a prominent colonial office-holder, so I know it is official and can be frozen to as the truth.

"Up there I have seen the mercury in thermometers frozen solid, and have been told that it is common for whole flocks of geese to be frozen in the lakes and rivers for two weeks at a time and when thawed out come to life again and swim off as though nothing had happened to stop the natural course of their lives. Down here in St. Louis your weather is like balmy spring compared to what it was last week even in Chicago, when it was so cold that even world's fair liars had their words frozen as they spoke and fell with a cold, dull thud. In fact, I never heard of such cold except when the great Gargantua in searching for the oracle of the sacred battle invaded a North sea, when the warmth of his vessel suddenly thawed out a multitude of sound, which proved to be the noises of a battle that had once been fought on the spot, years before, but were only then released. You people may think you know something about cold weather down here, but you really don't know the meaning of the word."

AN ALGERIAN TRIAL.

A Celebrated Brigand Hired to Assassinate a Commercial Clerk.

A trial which has for some time past been causing great excitement in Algeria has come to a conclusion before the Constantine Court of Assizes.

The details of the case are as follows: In February last M. Flandin, a clerk in an important commercial house at Jemmapes, the Maison Camillieri Freres, left his club at about 9 o'clock in the evening to return home, when a shot fired full at his chest stretched him dead on the ground.

As M. Flandin was a man of very gentle character, and not at all rich, it was difficult, then, to find a motive for the crime. Two very much mutilated fingers were picked up a few yards from the corpse. It was apparent that the murderer's weapon had exploded, and the discovery of the debris of an old pistol confirmed the suspicion. The police for a long time sought a man with his hand mutilated in the manner mentioned.

At length they heard of an Arab brigand of the name of Ayachi Abdallah, who was a terror to the whole country, and an expedition against him was organized. Ayachi Abdallah was discovered among some ruins near Lake Fezzarat. He had lost two fingers of the right hand. At first he denied his guilt, but finally confessed, saying that he was instigated to commit the crime by M. Rambert, banker of Phillippeville, and his partner, M. Camillieri fils.

It appears that the year before M. Flandin, cousin of M. Camillieri, had determined the father to disavow the debts which his son had contracted in his partnership with M. Rambert, thus depriving the latter of a wealthy sleeping partner. Flandin had written to the Procureur of the Republic, at Phillippeville, after this event, that if any misfortune happened to him it would be at the hands of Camillieri fils and Rambert. The murderer was promised a sum of 500 francs when his task was accomplished.

Finally the court condemned Rambert and Ayachi Abdallah to death. Camillieri, who was recognized as a mere dupe of Rambert, was acquitted.

TOLD BY THEIR FEET.

One Means of Discovering the Beauty of Moorish Women.

There is something continually interesting in the muffled figures of the women. They make you almost ashamed of the uncovered faces of the American women in the town; and, in the lack of any evidence to the contrary, you begin to believe every Moorish woman or girl you meet is as beautiful as her eyes would make it appear that she is, writes Richard Harding Davis in Harper's Weekly.

Those of the Moorish girls whose faces I saw were distinctly handsome; they were the women Benjamin Constant paints in his pictures of Algiers, and about whom Pierre Loti goes into ecstacies in his book on Tangier. Their robe or cloak, or whatever the thing is that they affect, covers the head like a hood, and with one hand they hold one of its folds in front of the face as high as their eyes. The only times that I ever saw the face of any of them was when I occasionally eluded Mohamed and ran off with a little guide called Isaac, the especial protector of two American women, who farmed him out to me when they preferred to remain in the hotel.

He is a particularly beautiful youth, and I noticed that whenever he was with me the cloaks of the women had a fashion of coming undone, and they would lower them for an instant and look at Isaac, and then replace them severely upon the bridge of the nose. Then Isaac would turn toward me with a shy, conscious smile and blush violently. Isaac says that the young men of Tangier can tell whether or not a girl is pretty by looking at her feet. It is true that their feet are bare, but it struck me as being a somewhat reckless testing for selecting a bride.

DOWN WITH THE SHIP

BRITISH WARSHIP VICTORIA SUNK IN THE MEDITERRANEAN.

Of the Seven Hundred Officers and Men on Board the Vessel, Over Four Hundred and Fifty Find a Watery Grave.

London, June 24.—A most terrible calamity has befallen the British battleship Victoria, flagship of the Mediterranean squadron, and hundreds of lives have been lost.

The Victoria, which flew the flag of Vice Admiral Sir George Tryon, K. C. B., was run into off Teipoli by the British battleship Camperdown, also belonging to the Mediterranean squadron, and under the command of Capt. Charles Johnstone. The Victoria had an enormous hole made in her side through which the water poured in torrents. The immense hull of the Victoria at once began to settle, and, before those on board of her could cast loose their small boats, she went to the bottom, carrying down with her nearly all on board. Some of the officers and crew managed to get out of the suction caused by the sinking of the vessel, and were rescued. Among those lost is Vice Admiral Tryon.

The first reports of the disaster stated that about 200 men had been drowned, but later dispatches show that the loss of life was far greater, over 400 of the officers and crew of the Victoria having gone down with their ship.

The Victoria was a twin-screw battleship of 10,370 tons and 14,000 horse power. She mounted fifteen guns. The Camperdown is also a first-class twin screw battleship. She is of 10,600 tons and 11,000 horse power and carried ten guns.

Admiral Sir George Tryon was commander-in-chief on the Mediterranean station. He was made a vice admiral Aug. 20, 1891.

Rear Admiral Albert H. Markham, of the Trafalgar, the flagship of the rear admiral in the Mediterranean, has telegraphed to the admiralty from Teipoli, Syria, as follows:

"I regret to report that while manuvering off Teipoli the Victoria and Camperdown collided. The Victoria sank in fifteen minutes in eighteen fathoms of water. She lies bottom uppermost. The Camperdown's ram struck the Victoria forward of the turret on the starboard side. Twenty-one officers were drowned. Two hundred and fifty men were saved. The injury to the Camperdown has not yet been fully ascertained, but it is serious and will necessitate her going on dock for repairs. I propose to send the survivors to Malta."

There were 718 souls on board. Of this number 468 were lost.

Fielden, Schwab and Neebe, Charged With Complicity in the Haymarket Riot in Chicago in 1886, Released From the Penitentiary.

Springfield, Ill., June 27.—Gov. Altgeld yesterday issued pardons to Samuel Fielden, Oscar Neebe and Michael Schwab, the anarchists serving terms of imprisonment at Joliet penitentiary for alleged complicity in the Haymarket riot in Chicago on the night of May 6, 1886. The governor takes the grounds that these men had not a fair trial and that the court was prejudiced. He scores Judge Gary and Chief of Police Bonfield severely.

Chicago, June 27.—Gov. Altgeld's action in pardoning the anarchists created no great excitement here. While it was not looked for yesterday, it was expected, from the governor's well known opinions upon the matter, that the pardons were merely a question of time, and a short time at that. Ever since the men went to Joliet there has been a strong movement on foot for their release. The great mass of Germans, the Turner societies and the foreign element generally, has been strong in urging their freedom. Few petitions so large as those sent in behalf of Schwab, Fielden and Neebe were ever prepared in this country. They came from all parts of America, and included as signers men of every stamp of opinion and every grade of position and wealth. Fielden, Schwab and Neebe arrived in Chicago last night and went at once to their homes. The meeting with their families was very affecting. Theo. H. Beaulieu, of White Earth and a member of the corps of Chippewa pine land appraisers, recently appointed, paid our office a pleasant call on Monday.

The Great Northern and Northern Pacific are well started towards a lively rate war on the passenger rates to the coast. Rates have already been cut one-half and the end not yet in-sight.

Our tri-weekly effort called by courtesy a train gets here several hours late about every trip lately. The reason is that they spend several hours on the road distributing ties. Did any one ever state that the Great Northern would give us better train service after the line reached the coast.

During the past year about 400,000 immigrants have came to the United States. Out of this number 4.155 have settled in the South, and the others have found homes in the West. The Baltimore American thinks the reason the Southern states do not get immigration is "because they do not advertise for it."

A new style of postal money order will be issued by the post office department which will prove a great convenience to the public. In this system sheets will be used calling for amounts from 1 cent to $3, which can be torn off to suit the purchaser. The postmaster will have no writing to do on it, the sender simply indorsing it the same as a check or draft. One cent will pay the charges in any amount up to $5 instead of 5 cents as at present.

There is one kind of epidemic against which there can be no quarantine, and that is the epidemic of disaster. We are now passing through one of the most remarkable epidemics of this character of recent record. Accidents by rail and water, by fire and lightning and cyclone follow each other in startlingly swift succession. Will science some day tell us why these things come "bunched" and will some succeeding scientist devise a method of quarantine.—Tribune.

About sixty men working for the Great Northern on the road and in the gravel pit struck last Friday morning for higher pay. The men claimed that they were compelled to work thirteen or fourteen hours a day and not getting credit for over time. They were paid $1,25 per day. They asked for $1.50 per day but were refused. The tram crew were here Friday idle but went in Saturday returning on Monday morning when most of the men resumed work at the old price. They will not be compelled, however, to work as many hours to make a day.

In a financial point of view the Columbian Exposition seems to be getting on its feet. The attendance is now satisfactorily large and the treasury is no longer in a condition of collapse. Some of the railroads have wisely begun to reduce their fares, and there is reason to hope that the movement in this direction will become general Inevitably the fair will suffer from the financial depression that is producing so many unfortunate results, but the necessity of attracting people to Chicago is becoming generally recognized and the effects are already apparent. It may be said once more that all who can go ought to go to the fair.—Grand Forks Herald.

The county division is still being agitated by the ambitious residents of neighboring towns who expect to realize a nice little sum from the sale of lots for court house sites or for their services as county officers in the new counties It would cost the taxpayers many thousands of dollars to establish new counties in the territory now embraced in Polk county and what particular benefit would ninety-nine one hundredths of them receive by doing so? With the present hard times can the farmers or business men who pay the taxes af ford to build court houses and jails, or to support several sets of county officers to do the work which one set is now doing, is a question that few will answer in the affirmative.—Crookston Times.

On the 10. Emma Waters was arrested at Albany and held in bonds for useing the mails fraudulently. Numerous wifeseekers had made complaint that they were being swindled by a women, who had promised to marry them though correspondence of course, and as the love-making by letter progressed. and the point was reached where she was about to start out and meet her would-be husband, she would write requesting money to purchas goods, defray traveling expences etc. In response she invariably recieved sums ranging from $50 to $100. That is the last the would-be husband would hear of the lady. The specific complaint upon which she is held is by a resident of Hallock, Minn., who says he was duped out of $50—and lacerated affections.—Prison Mirror.

The Crookston Gun Club came up on last Friday's train for a friendly shoot with the St. Hilaire Club. The following are names of some that came. A. Q. Cowing, T. G. Thompson, George Vine, A. C. Schmidt, Tom Morris, J. E. Morrissey, W. H. Norris, F. W. Markman Christ. Hoch, J. Cocker H. O. A. Campbell, Fred Sargent Cheif of Police Gonyea, Wm. Peterson. Ed Cleary, and Carl Reidsel also were with the party but did not shoot. Owing to the train being late the time was short and but two matches of nine birds each were shot. In the first Morris took first prize Markman second Schmidt and P. S. Stranahan third and Cowing fourth. In the second Schmidt first P. S. Stranahan second Morrisy third and Hoch fourth. The third match was commenced but not ended on account of time. The parties from here who engaged in the shoot were: P. H. Stranahan, E. H. Stranahan, Ives, Eikhoff, Bjerk Johnson, Post and S. M. Hoff. The event passed off pleasantly and all seemed to have a good time, and the club here will be pleased to entertain the Crookston club again.

A close examination will reveal the fact that nearly all the growing wheat is already jointed and that the miniature head is formed and may easily be seen. It is away past the stooling point and there will be no more stalks at harvest time than there are now. The hot weather of the last few weeks has prevented stooling to the usual extent and it is now a fixed fact that there will be a light crop of straw. On the other hand the crop has been hurried forward with exceptional speed and promises an early maturity with ordinary weather conditions. The advanced condition of the fields by the Fourth of July, which is a common date of observation, will doubtless be surprising.—Stephen Leader.

VISITORS TO THE TWIN CITIES.

No one should visit the Twin Cities this summer without running out to Minnetonka Beach and Hotel Lafayette, the largest and best located resort house in the west. The lake is one of the most picturesque in the country and is well supplied with steamers and sailing, rowing and fishing-craft. A number of regattas will be given. The Great Northern has a double track line to the lake and runs frequent trains.

DEVILS LAKE CHAUTAUQUA.

The first summer Assembly of the North Dakota Chautauqua comes off June 28th to July 17th. An extensive program has been arranged, including many noted speakers, singers, etc., and the occasion promises to be most interesting and instructive Devils Lake is a summer resort point. The Great Northern Railway gives reduced rates. Address J. B. Fancher, Secretary, Devils Lake, N. D for programs and other inform. A trip to the lake and assembly will make an enjoyble outing.

A LARGE DROP IN RATES TO THE WEST

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 18th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates-amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First class from $60.00 to [illegible] to Spokane from $[illegible] to $[illegible]; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

Last summer I was attacked with a bad case of flux, and after taking four doses of Beggs' Diarrhoea Balsam was immediately relieved and cured . have sold it for the past six months and can say that it gives general satisfaction - J. W. Smith, M. D. Puxico, Mo. For sale by J. L.Johnson, Druggest.

EGGS BY THE THOUSANDS.

HOW THEY ARE HATCHED ARTIFICIALLY IN EGYPT.

Ninety Thousand in Process of Incubation at Once—An Old Man and a Boy the Sole Attendants.

This being the season of the year that the chicken industry is a subject of special interest, the proverb of "time is money" is especially applicable to the festive hen. Some information which an able counsel sends from Egypt on artificial hatchings of chickens may be interesting. The Egyptians of thousands of years ago seem to have fully realized the value of the hen. They saw even in the dim twilight of those early days the absurdity of one hen devoting three weeks of time and six weeks of scratching to the production of twelve chickens. Hence, the Egytians mind applied itself to the task of artificial incubation, and soon incubated artificially a system by which one man with a few simple accompaniments could have 90,000 eggs in hatching process at one time. An incubator which has 90,000 eggs undergoing at one time is regarded by the Brooklyn Citizen as quite an institution, and the thought of one incubator and one decrepit man, with the aid of a 16-year-old boy and a small quantity of fuel, turning out 234,000 chickens in three months' time has led Consul General Cardwell, of Cario, to give the people of the United States some hints on chicken producing.

The "incubatory," as Consul Cardwell terms it, is a huge affair built of sundried bricks, mortar and earth. The walls are sixteen feet high and two feet in thickness, but there are double walls around the outside and the space between is filled with earth so as to prevent the escape of the heat and keep an even temperature within. The floor is covered with mortar to prevent the entrance of moisture. Within the structure is divided into compartments which are like a baker's oven in shape. These are the places where the eggs are deposited for hatching, and the care with which they are constructed to prevent changes in atmosphere from without is shown by the fact that there is at least ten feet thickness of wall and earth between them and the climate outside.

This is heated several days before the eggs are placed inside, and after the moisture is all expelled the attendant determines the proper temperature without a thermometer, but merely by his own sensation, and during the weeks in which the eggs are in process of incubation the two attendants live day and night with them, keeping sufficient fire, opening or closing draughts and air ducts, never allowing the heat to fall below 98 or rise above 100 degrees, and all without the aid of a thermometer, until at the end of the twenty-one days the thousands of chickens begin to make their appearance.

"Artificial incubation," says Consul Cardwell, "is by no means a strictly modern industry in Egypt. The art of hatching eggs by other than natural process was known and practiced by ancient Egyptians, and the Egyptian incubatory of to-day is but a reproduction of the one of thousands of years ago. In all these years the Egyptian breed of a chickens has not changed and the manner of production has remained immutable. Not long ago I secured a metal stamp of a chicken deposited in a tomb over 2,000 years ago, and it is the perfect type of the Egyptian fowl of to-day, and when the stamp was struck artificial incubation was a thing of actual existence in Egypt. The methods of hatching eggs by artificial means and a knowledge of constructing appliances for the same have descended through ages from father to son, and the wonderful success attending this industry throws into insignificance the modern scientific machine lately introduced into the United States and elsewhere. The marvelous success of artificial fowl production in Egypt proves the fact that inventive genius, even in America, might be directed into more successful and far less expensive methods of industry by drawing inspiration from these patient, never-tiring people of the Nile valley. In 1880 the fowl industry of the United States amounted to over $200,000,000; and if to so vast an industry could be applied the economies of the Egyptian production, profits would be trebled. These economies are exercised in everything. Not only are eggs put through the process of incubation more cheaply than anywhere else in the world but chicks are reared at an expense past comprehension, while desease and natural death among fowls, because of tireless care, are almost unknown. The incubatory is constructed of sundried bricks, mortar and earth. The one examined by me was a structure 70 feet long, 60 feet wide and 16 feet high. It is provided with twelve compartments, or incubators, each capable of holding 7,500 eggs, making a total capacity of 90,000 eggs undergoing incubation at one time.

"The season of operation lasts only three months out of the twelve, beginning with March and ending with May; therefore, allowing three weeks for incubating eggs, one week for removing each hatch and preparation for again filling the incubators with eggs, the number of eggs under treatment at this incubator in one season may be placed at 270,000. From these are hatched 234,000 chicks. The percentage of hatch would be much greater, but the eggs, being necessarily procured in large quantities and from distant places, are largely damaged for incubation. Still those lacking vitality are not lost. Experience makes the attendants of the incubators great experts, and in a very few days after the eggs are placed in the ovens the trained hand detects as quickly the unvitalized egg as does the expert bank cashier the defective coin. The unvitalized eggs are at once placed upon the market at low prices for culinary consumption. Eggs are bought for the incubator at never exceeding 5 cents a dozen. After the incubators begin to turn out their product people come from all the surrounding region, buying up the hatch in numbers to suit and disposing of eggs in exchange for chickens. The latter, distributed everywhere, are then reared, with a very small percentage of loss, for sale in the markets. The oven crop of marketable chickens is estimated at 15,000,000 in one season, and calculating that, one-fourth only of this crop of chickens die during their growth period, it may be asserted that 20,000,000 is the hatch of the ovens.

"Here is a huge economy. To hatch the same number of chickens by the natural method would call into requisition the patience of 1,500,000 hens, and all this vast number of mothers would require sustenance during two months of incubation and brooding. The curiously inclined are left to figure out what Egyptians save in resorting to artificial incubation, and they will be surprised to think that it takes vastly less care to look after an incubation of 20,000,000 in the oven than would be required with 1,500,000 feathered mothers. One man and a small boy are the sole attendants of the incubatory I explored. They live in the ovens night and day during the entire period of three months devoted to incubation. The temperature is never less than 98 degrees. This man and boy keep up the smouldering fires that create this temperature; they place the eggs in the ovens, move the great masses of eggs four of five times during twenty-four hours, look after the chicks, deliver them to buyers, keep the incubator in perfect order, sort out the infertile eggs, and feed the little chicks. Think of 234,000 chicks owing life alone to the tender care in three months' time to an old man most defective eyesight and a sixteen-year-old boy, the same conception may be had of the economies of the Egyptian industry."

NAVIGATION OF THE AIR.

The Balloon Idea a Blunder—Air Ships Must Be Heavier Than the Air.

Prof. Bell, the electrician, discusses in the June number of McClure's Magazine the prospects for aerial navigation, and says:

"Of course the air ship of the future will be constructed without any balloon attachment. The discovery of the balloon undoubtedly retarded the solution of the flying problem for over a hundred years. Ever since the Montgolfiers taught the world how to rise in the air by means of inflated gas-bags, the inventors working at the problem of aerial navigation have been thrown on the wrong track. Scientific men have been wasting their time trying to steer balloons, a thing which in the nature of the case is impossible to any great extent, inasmuch as balloons, being lighter than the resisting air, can never make headway against it. The fundamental principal of aerial navigation is that the air ship must be heavier than the air. It is only of recent years that men capable of studying the problem seriously have accepted this as an axiom. Electricity in one form or another will undoubtedly be the motive power for air ships, and every advance in electrical knowledge brings us one step nearer to the day when we shall fly. It would be perfectly possible, to-day, to direct a flying machine by means of pendent electric wires which would transmit the necessary current without increasing the load to be borne. Perhaps a feasible means of propelling such an air ship would be by a kind of trolley system where the rod would hang down from the car to the stretched wire, instead of extending upward. This is an idea which I would recommend to inventors."

The Pilgrim From Mullingar.

A good pilgrim story comes from Rome to the Yorkshire Post. It appears that among the Irish pilgrims to the Eternal city was a certain shopkeeper from Mullingar. This gentleman looked forward with more concern than any of his fellow travelers to seeing his holiness, and on the morning of the audience at the Vatican was beside himself with excitement. Now it so happened that when the Irish pilgrims were about to enter that particular part of the Vatican where the pope was waiting to receive them the shopkeeper from Mullingar got separated from the rest of his friends, and turning the handle of a ponderous door, found himself in the presence of the august head of the Roman Catholic church. The blood almost froze in his veins, and in vain did he look for a face that he recognized. The splendor, too, of the papal court did not improve matters; so what he did was to throw himself on his knees at the feet of the pope and shout out, loud enough to be heard in every corner of the vast chamber, "Oh, howly father, Oi'm from Mullingar!"

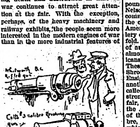
BIG GUNS AT THE FAIR.

EXAMPLES OF MODERN ORDNANCE.

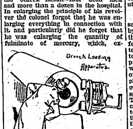
Death-Dealing Implements of Warfare—Great Britain Leads the World With Her Armstrong—Rapid Fire the Great Desideratum Nowadays.

The display of implements for causing death and destruction in time of war continues to attract great attention at the fair. With the exception, perhaps, of the heavy machinery and railway exhibits, the people seem more interested in the modern engines of war than in the more industrial features of the fair. There has never been, perhaps, so interesting and varied an exhibition in modern artillery as is now in Jackson Park. The very latest inventions in the way of ordnance, heavy and light, in all the nations of the earth are there to be seen, and what makes the display more interesting is that each new invention or improvement is accompanied by its ante-type of many years ago. For instance, in the British display, contiguous to some ripe old smooth-bores of the days of King George—guns taken from Nelson's flagship Victory—appears the first attempt in rifled artillery. The Whitforth breech-loading rifle was a creation of the Crimean war. It was effective while it lasted, and for some uses was a valuable accession to field and naval ordnance. But with the advent of steel armor plates and the introduction of heavier and powerful ordnance the old Whitforth rifle ceased to be manufactured in England. Near this obsolete specimen are several types of the Armstrong steel high-power gun of to-day. The English government has ceased to manufacture any larger gun that what is known as the sixty-five ton Armstrong, but no gun as large as that is on exhibit. The largest is a thirty-ton gun which corresponds in type with the American eight-inch rifle. These Armstrong guns in their various sizes and weights form the heavy batteries of England's new battle ships.



Obsolete Guns.

The German exhibit of heavy ordnance is mostly confined to the Krupp pavilion, which is not yet ready for the public. When it is thrown open it will be, perhaps, the grandest display of modern artillery the world has ever seen. Speaking of the Whitworth breech-loader, there is on display in the American exhibit a unique and somewhat amusing production of the brain of Col. Colt, inventor of the Colt revolver. It was during the civil war, when every thought was in the direction of human slaughter, that the colonel concluded to build a gun on the model of his revolver. In fact, it was a regular Colt revolver on something like a two-ton scale. It held six shots, and the revolving motion was conveyed by machinery turned by a crank. The caliber of the barrel was three inches and the weight of the ammunition and shell about twenty pounds. The colonel built two of these guns. Unfortunately one of them at the first trial met with an experience which rather discouraged its further manufacture. All its chambers being loaded, a test was made of the gun. The charge fixed for explosion went off all right, but so did all the others. Result—four dead men and more than a dozen in the hospital. In enlarging the principle of his revolver the colonel forgot that he was enlarging everything in connection with it, and particularly did he forget that he was enlarging the quantity of fulminate of mercury, which, exploding by concussion, could not very well withstand the explosion of another charge near by it. When this result became known Col. Colt abandoned the manufacture of heavy ordnance and stuck to his revolver. The gun—which did not explode, because it never had a chance—is on display in the army exhibit. There are several other curious relics in the ordnance exhibit of the navy. One of them is old "Long Tom," the famous bowchaser carried by the privateer General Armstrong in the days of the revolution. This vessel, after a capturing a British frigate in the English channel, and subsequently carrying destruction to the British marine, was finally wrecked on one of the Azores. The gun was subsequently fished up, and for more than eighty years has been mounted on one of the forts in the Azores islands.



Breech Loading Apparatus.

He Thought He Was "Sighting" the Gun.

Not many months ago the king of Portugal, thinking it would be a graceful act to return the old gun to its native country, presented it to the United States, and last summer an American man-of-war brought it home. It is now at Jackson Park, and attracts scores of visitors. It is of bronze, of the old-fashioned type, has a bore of about four inches, and it threw a shot weighing eighteen pounds. In the days when such guns were built the length of the gun was the only known way to secure a long range, and so "Long Tom," as he lies there on his back is almost as long as a modern five-inch high-power rifle.

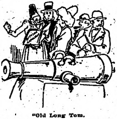
Captured From Mexico.

Of the curious old Mexican fieldpieces captured in the Mexican war, there is an unusual display. Some of these are very interesting because of their antiquity. Many of the old brass pieces bear a date in the seventeenth century, and were unmistakably mounted in Mexico at the time of the Spanish conquest. The most curious of all this ancient display is what is believed to be the oldest breech-loading gun ever conceived since the invention of gunpowder. It came from China, and for many years has been in the naval museum at the Washington navy yard. The breech-loading attachment consists chiefly of cutting out a section of the powder chamber, inserting a charge of powder, stuffing in a plug and letting her go. It is a curious contrivance, and shows that the principle of breech-loading guns was among the earliest ideas of civilized man. The gun is said by some to be ever so many centuries old. Contrasting this little piece with the rapid-fire ordnance of to-day displayed at Jackson Park by every nation is well calculated to impress the human mind. Modern rapid-fire ordnance has attained its highest growth and development within the past five years. In the artillery display of every country there is something marvelous and novel. What the old thirty-two-pound cannon did to win victories for Nelson and the galaxy of American commodores, who in the early part of the century did so much to glorify the American flag, the light rapid-fire artillery of to-day is able to accomplish tenfold. The proved inventions in this line of artillery are so numerous that they almost become wearisome. The Americans have four types of equal value. These are the Hotchkiss, the Briggs-Shroeder, another type invented by Ensigh Dashiell, of the navy, and yet another whose name is not now recalled. England exhibits the Armstrong rapid-fire gun, to be seen at the fair, which is fully the equal of any of the American type. The chief feature of the Armstrong rapid-fire is its calibre, its lightness and the rapidity with which it can be handled. It has a six-inch bore, weight six and one-half tons, throws a 100-pound projectile with seventeen pounds of smokeless powder and is fired by electricity. The best trials of this gun show a speed of five aimed shots in fifty-five seconds, four of them striking the target at a range of 900 yards. The powder used with this gun is known as cordite. It is a high-power explosive. This, therefore, may be regarded as the very highest type of modern rapid-fire ordnance. The Americans are improving the Hotchkiss, so that soon that gun will equal the British.

What the French Show.

In the French exhibit is shown the Canet rapid fire gun. The largest gun of that type is five and a half inches in caliber and 11,000 pounds in weight. It uses twenty-four pounds of smokeless powder and throws a seventy-pound shell. In rapidity of fire the French are ahead of both British and Americans, for at a trial of one of these guns at exhibitions two years ago, seven unaimed shots were fired in fifty-four seconds and at another trial of a smaller one of the same type five unaimed shots were fired in twenty-four seconds. The Russian naval authorities have adopted the Canet type of rapid fire gun for their service.

Then there are other types of such ordnance on display in their department by the different nationalities.

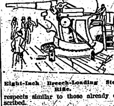


"Old Long Tom."

There is a Danish gun known as the Finspong and a Dutch gun known as the Gericke, the invention of Capt. Gericke of the Dutch navy. Then there is the Gruson, which is the invention of a Prussian officer. The gun is lighter than either the British or American type, but it fires an average of thirteen shots in thirty seconds. Then there is the Krupp rapid fire gun, which will be on exhibition in the Krupp pavilion. This is a heavier gun than any except the Armstrong, but it is not so rapid. The largest type carries seventeen pounds of powder and a seventy-six pound shell, but its highest speed is seven aimed shots a minute.

Other Death Dealers.

In the transportation building are several rapid fire guns manufactured by private English firms. The best of these is known as the Maxim-Nordenfeldt. This gun is four and three-quarter inch caliber, weighs two and a half tons, and throws a forty-five pound projectile. Trials made in England with this gun prove that at a range of 100 yards four-inch steel plates were pierced with ease. The chief beauty of these small pieces, howevr, is the speed with which they can be fired. The gun of this make of three-inch caliber, or what is known as a fourteen-pounder, can be fired thirty-five times a minute. The two-inch gun, or three-pounder, has attained a speed of sixty shots a minute, or one every second. In fact, at one trial this gun fired sixty shots in fifty-nine seconds. In this same exhibit is perhaps to be found the most effective machine gun of any of the smaller calibers. It is known as the maxim automatic known as the maxim automatic gun. There are two of these guns on exhibition. One of them, which weighs only eighty pounds has attained a rate of 600 shots a minute. The other is a larger piece, weighs 304 pounds, has a powder charge of three ounces and throws a little baby shell weighing one pound, but it throws at the rate of 250 a minute. Then there is a gun shown as the Skoda rapid-fire gun, which is to be seen in the Austrian exhibit. The details of this gun's capabilities are not at hand, bt it is in most respects similar to those already described.



Eight-Inch Breech-Loading Steel Rifle.

Marvelous Projectiles.

When it comes to the display of projectiles the mind becomes dazed. The projectiles range in size from 1 pound to 1,800 pounds. The latter is the projectile for the big Krupp gun. It is as big as a barrel and as tall as the average man. The average service projectile, however, weighs from 100 to 250 pounds. The biggest American shell on exhibit weighs 1,100 pounds, and is for the big 12-inch gun on exhibit in the war department. The ancient and obsolete projectiles are also displayed in great number. They include everything from what is known as the old "bar shot" and "chain shot" down to the ingenious explosive projectiles invented during the war by the confederates, some of which were very novel. The "bar shot" was made by splitting a cannon ball in two and connecting the two halves by an iron bar; their purpose was to cut rigging and ship spars. The chain shot was on a similar principle, except that two cannon balls were connected by a long heavy chain. This was for the same purpose. When Farragut attacked the forts below New Orleans, these things were fired from the guns of the enemy in great numbers, and the horrible noise that they made was well calculated to wake the dead or turn a strong man's hair gray. They came through the air like shrieking demons, and anybody who ever heard one will cheerfully forego a repetition of the sensation. Another curious exhibit is an old-fashioned furnace for heating shots to fire at ships. These two are relics of by-gone ages. Probably the last time a red-hot shot was ever fired at a ship was at the same battle of New Orleans. They used to tell a funny story about a confederate officer who had charge of a red-hot shot battery at Fort Jackson. The science of war was new to the confederates in those days, as well as to the federals, and he was not expected to know all about firing red-hot shot. His battery consisted of two guns. For two hours he blazed away at the passing fleet, and after the affair was over every shot that had been put into his guns was found in the ditch below the muzzles of the guns. The secret was that the men, in their supreme haste to get rid of the red-hot shot after it had entered the gun, would run the gun out so quickly and with such force that before the captain of the gun could reach his lanyard to fire, the hot shot would roll out at the muzzle, and the result was that nearly every shot he fired was only a blank cartridge.

ANTIQUITY OF BELL FOUNDING

The Art Known to the Saxons Many Years Before the Norman Conquest.

The art of bell founding is undoubtedly of great antiquity. The Saxons are known to have used bells in their churches, although probably but small ones, for the Venerable Bede, writing at the end of the seventh century, alludes to them in terms which seem to show that they were not unfamiliar things. The towers of the Saxon period have belfries of considerable dimensions in most cases, and, according to the Gentleman's Magazine, at Crowland abbey, in South Lincolnshire, there was a famous peal of seven bells many years before the Norman conquest. The monks at that time and for long after were the chief practitioners of the art of bell founding—which indeed is one of the many things those well abused men have handed down to us. Their bells were rarely without inscriptions, often in very bad Latin, containing perhaps some obscure joke, the point of which is now lost. More often they were of a religious nature, sometimes probably not unmixed with a dash of superstition, as when the bell declares that its sound drives away the demons of the air who caused pestilence and famine, lightning and thunderstorms. As a rule unfortunately they put no dates on their bells, a defect which has been in somemeasure overcome by the researches of many enthusiastic campanologists, but which is likely to keep the early history of bells shrouded in darkness for a long time to come.

Pretty Gowns.

A dainty black gauze, made up for afternoon wear, is figured with a little transparent chine design in black. The lining of this gown is apricot-colored satin. The skirt is made in the new circular shape. The skirt of gauze alone is cut in the circular form. The satin slip skirt is considerably narrower and is united to the skirt of gauze only at the belt. The gauze skirt is trimmed at the bottom with a four-inch band of black Chantilly lace, laid over apricot satin, with a second band of the same kind about fourteen inches below the belt. The bodice is made rather full and round for a slender figure, with a triple girdle of black satin. A bertha of the gauze-like material, bound with black satin, is placed across the back, and ended in short, jabot-like revers in front. The sleeves are in the high leg-o'-mutton shape, of the tissue over satin, and extended well over the arm.

"Getting Into a Scrape."

The red and fallow deer which formerly roamed through the English forests had a habit of scraping up the earth with their forefeet to the depth of several inches, sometimes even of half a yard. The stranger passing through these woods was frequently exposed to the danger of tumbling into one of these hollows, when he might be said truly to be "in a scrape." The college students of Cambridge, in their little perplexities, picked up and applied the phrase to other perplexing matters which had brought a man morally into a fix.

"And that's why you watch 'em so much and drive on the boulevards with 'em and keep 'em looking so slick, isn't it?"

The Old-Time Grandma Gone.

Elderly women are no longer content to be relegated to the comfort of the fireside with cap and knitting work. "Grandma" nowadays is not the traditional old lady, with snowy kerchief crossed over her placid breast, to whose quiet room the maiden repairs with her love affairs and the children with their childish bruises. Not that grandma is a whit less sympathetic or a less kind and gentle counsellor, but she is as actively concerned in the business of life as the children themselves. She dresses quietly in the prevailing mode; she is on committees and attends club meetings and lectures with far more freedom and enjoyment than was possible when the demands of a young family hampered her. If she doesn't endlessly knit stockings and mittens for her grandchildren, she does better things for them by keeping in touch with the world and the needs of young life, thus making her counsel wise and strong and practical.

PICTURESQUE UTAH.

Her Beauties Are Unrivalled by Those of any Other Country.

The mountain regions of Utah are said by many travelers and artists to possess attributes of beauty unrivaled by those of any other country. The immense sweeps of landscape, whose distances are not to be estimated by any one unaccustomed to regions of this nature, are surprising, and are possessed of a grand and rugged simplicity that affords a special opportunity to the artist who is fond of laying his colors on his canvas in broad, sweeping strokes. Mountains upon mountains seem to rise, receding into hazy distances, while great valleys roll away in gentle slopes or pause abruptly at the bases of grim precipices. Alpine lakes abound, and great roaring streams and cataracts tear down through the gulches to the valleys below—splendid forces when turned to purposes of usefulness.

The mountains are demonstrative of immensity in every respect—the splendid lines carved in their sides sometimes sweeping from highest peak to base. Their formations are unique, differing from those of other mountainous regions, partially on account of the aridity of the climate, which is not productive of the same vegetation usually found among other mountain ranges. The Wasatch and the Uintahs present the appearance of grassy plains sloping gently to the base of the mountains, while numerous canons break their continuity at intervals. These canons are formed by the action of the elements on the mountain mass, whose erosion cuts through the breast of the range regardless of the kind of hardness of the rocks of which it is formed.—California Magazine.

Well Dressed Troops.

The Germans are very thrifty in their habits, and no one visiting a German barrack-room would suspect their military authorities of extravagance, yet in regard to uniforms they seem to us extremely liberal; each soldier has five uniforms for varying degrees of work. The most inexpensive is the coarse linen one used in summer about the barracks, and the most valuable one is that which he wears on extraordinary festive occasions, as, for instance, the grand review of the guards in the spring of the year; but beyond all those which he wears at more or less frequent intervals is the uniform which he puts on when the emperor issues his order to mobilize for war. Then is taken out the absolutely new uniform, and with this he marches to the front. The troops that marched to the frontier in 1870 looked as though ready for a review rather than for the dirty work of campaigning.—From "Side Lights on the German Soldier," in Harper's Magazine.

WILL MEET AUGUST 7

AN EXTRA SESSION OF CONGRESS IS CALLED.

President Cleveland, Feeling Assured That the Sherman Law Will Be Repealed, Calls Congress Together for That Purpose.

Washington, July 1.—The following proclamation was issued late last evening:

"Executive Mansion, Washington, June 30, 1893.—Whereas the distrust and apprehension concerning the financial situation which pervades all business circles have already caused great loss and damage to our people and threaten to cripple our merchants, stop the wheels of manufacture, bring distress and privation to our farmers and withhold from our workingmen the wage of labor; and, whereas, the present perilous condition is largely the result of the financial policy which the executive branch of the government finds embodied in unwise laws which must be executed until repealed by congress; now, therefore, I, Grover Cleveland, president of the United States, in performance of a constitutional duty, do by this proclamation declare that an extraordinary occasion requires the convening of both houses of congress of the United States at the capitol in the city of Washington, on the 7th day of August, next, at 12 o'clock, noon, to the end that the people may be relieved through legislation from present and impending danger and distress. All those entitled to act as members of the Fifty-third congress are requested to take notice of this proclamation, and attend at the time and place above mentioned. Given under my hand and the seal of the United States at the city of Washington on the 30th day of June in the year of our Lord, One thousand eight hundred and ninety-three, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and seventeenth.

—"Grover Cleveland."

The president had left direction for the issuance of the proclamation before his departure for Gray Gables. The determination to call the extra session the first week in August instead of the first week in September, it is understood, was only definitely desided at yesterday morning's cabinet session after giving full weight to the numerous telegrams received from all parts of the country urging this course. Another consideration which caused the president to change his mind was foreshadowed in the remark made by one of his cabinet officers two days ago that if the president received reasonable assurances that there was a likelihood of a prompt repeal of the so-called Sherman silver purchase law, he might be disposed to call congress together earlier than he had announced. It is inferred from the fact that the president has done so that he considers he has obtained the assurance he desired.

FIRES DRAWN.

Pittsburg, July 1.—The fires in all the glass factories in the country were drawn to-day for the usual summer shut down. The green bottle plants will resume in six weeks, but the window glass and flint glass factories will not start up until September. The window glass scale will be presented about Sept. 1, and the factories will resume operations as soon after that date as an agreement can be reached. The Western scale or wage committee will meet in this city about the middle of next month and prepare the new schedule. The manufacturers are making a general wail on account of the monetary stringency which will be heard in the conference.

FOR HER LIFE.

Muncie, Ind., July 1.—Mrs. Peter Seibel had a hard fight for her life with her maniac husband. Seibel went home with a gun in his pocket. He aggravated the woman, then pulled the revolver and attempted to fire. She grabbed his arm and a hard tussle followed. Finally, with his arm behind her, the revolver was discharged, the ball entering just above and at the rear of the left hip. With superhuman strength the woman disarmed her husband before he could fire again. He says he is sorry he did not kill her. He attempted suicide by cutting a blood vessel.

ALLOTTING LANDS.

Guthrie, Okla., July 1.—The allotting agents have finished allotting lands to Dawnee Indians on their reservation in the Cherokee strip and forwarded their reports to Washington to be recorded and confirmed. This completes the greatest part of the preliminary work incidental to the opening of the strip to settlement, and there is now no good reason why the proclamation should not be issued in a very few days.

BANKERS ARRESTED.

Dallas, Tex., July 1.—John R. Williams and W. F. Jones were arrested to-day on an indictment by the federal grand jury charging Williams, as president of the First National bank at Rockwell, with embezzling $23,000 and abstracting $42,000 of notes of the bank. Also with making false reports to the controller. Jones was cashier of the same bank, and is charged with complicity in the transactions.

THE PLANS RECEIVED.

St. Paul, July 1.—The plans for the state elevator at Duluth were received from the architects, Barnett & Record of Minneapolis, yesterday. The railroad and warehouse commission and Gov. Nelson during the afternoon officially inspected the plans, and this morning passed upon them. The plans provide for a 500,000-bushel elevator and a 1,500,000-bushel annex.

A LA NEW YORK.

St. Louis, July 1.—The movement to secure funds to erect a monument in memory of the late Gen. W. T. Sherman has made slow progress. Yesterday at a meeting of the committee having the matter in charge the chairman was authorized to issue a circular to the Grand Army posts throughout the country calling for contributions to the fund.

ORIENTAL PILGRIMS.

Rome, July 1.—The pope to-day received a deputation of Oriental pilgrims who visited Rome in connection with the jubilee of his holiness.

FOR FALLEN HEROES.

Gettysburg, Pa., July 3.—With bright sunlight above the field on which Gettysburg's decisive battle was fought, stretching out below, New York State's handsome monument to the heroes who fell in the fight was dedicated with impressive ceremonies. It was the great day of the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the three days' fight. Seven thousand New York veterans, the governors of two states, the surviving generals of the battle, and thousands of veterans and visitors from other states were present to lend impressiveness and moment to the scene.

Rev. O. W. Severson, of the 137th New York volunteers, opened the proceedings of the morning with a prayer. The veterans then sang "America." Gen. Avery then introduced Maj. Gen. Henry W. Slocum, who made an eloquent address. He was followed by Gen. Greene and Gov. Flower. There were loud shouts for Gen. Sickles as Gov. Flower took his seat, and the general was given a hearty cheer as he stood with the aid of his crutches and congratulated the veterans on getting together on the old battleground.

In the afternoon the space surrounding the monument was completely filled with people, fully 10,000 being present. The scene from the platform was a most impressive one. Row after row of bronze-faced, gray-haired men in the dark blue of the Grand Army; back of them a sea of faces of men, women and children reaching back to the growth of evergreens which marks the border of the ground. Gen. Sickles opened the proceedings by waving his hat for order, as his voice could not reach the outer ranks of the audience. Rev. W. B. Derrick, the colored veteran preacher, then offered prayer. Gen. Sickles then, as president of the board of Gettysburg monument commissioners of New York State, delivered the introductory address. Bishop Potter was then introduced. He delivered the dedication address. Gov. Pattison and Gov. Flower then spoke, a poem was then read, and then the cannon thundered their salute to the monument and to the memory of the dead, and while smoke rolled across the wheat fields of the valley the crowd dispersed.

FOR THE WEDDING.

London, July 3.—The foreign guests invited to attend the wedding of the duke of York and Princess May, which will take place on Thursday next, are beginning to arrive. King Christian of Denmark, father of the Princess of Wales and grandfather of the duke of York, accompanied by Queen Louise, arrived at Harwich from Copenhagen this morning. They were greeted with a salute of twenty-one guns. The czarewitch, who will be the official representative of the czar at the wedding, arrived at Sheerness to-day. He was also welcomed by twenty-one guns. As soon as the royal personages landed they proceeded to London.

Ringler & Co., $25,000; Smith's hat and umbrella store, $5,000; Maddock & Co., $5,000; Imperial cafe, $1,000. FROM EAR TO EAR.

Maysville, Ky., July 3.—A well dressed man about twenty-five years old was found this morning a mile below here in a fence corner with his throat cut from ear to ear. The man is still alive and gave his residence as Newport, but is not able to give his name, neither is there anything about his person by which he can be positively identified. From the description held by the police he is thought to be Crosby, who murdered his wife at Newport, Ky.

FATAL WRECK.

Sheckelman, the conductor, was injured, but not seriously.

Late last night he was found in an old foundry on the outskirts of Grass Valley and was soon surrounded by officers and citizens. THE VICTORIA WRECK

AN OFFICIAL DISPATCH REGARDING THE DISASTER.

Twenty-Two Officers and Three Hundred and Thirty-Six Men Lost in the Recent Collision Between Two British War Vessels.

London, July 3.—A midshipman from the Victoria arrived at Calais with Rear Admiral Markham's dispatches concerning the collision off Tripoli. He was brought by special steamer, the Maid of Kent, to Dover, and was conveyed thence by special train to London. He drove directly to the admiralty office, where the admiralty board, notified in advance of his coming, received and read the dispatches at once. The first dispatch was from Rear Admiral Markham, dated from the warship Camperdown on June 22. It says: "It is with the most profound regret that I have to report to you the total loss of her majesty's ship Victoria, involving the irreparable loss of the commander-in-chief, Vice Admiral Sir George Tryon, twenty-two officers and 321 men." The dispatch gives a detailed description of the wreck of the Victoria, which has already been published. He thinks that it would have been impossible to have followed Admiral Tryon's orders and avoided a collision. The injuries to the Camperdown are serious, but he hopes that with the assistance of the artificers of the squadron they may be temporarily repaired so that she may be sent to Malta and docked.

Hon. Maurice A. Bourke, the captain of the Victoria, sends to the admiralty a letter dated H. M. S. Nile, June 23. Capt. Bourke recites technically his orders up to the point of making the turn.

SELF-CONFESSED FORGER.

St. Louis, July 3.—This afternoon a man giving his name as Louis Trowbridge walked into the office of Chief of Police Harrigan and asked to be arrested. He is a self-confessed forger, and has been free for eight years, while another man has been suffering for his crime. Eight years ago Trowbridge, then a San Francisco lumber merchant, forged a note for $1,800, using the name of Warren Jones, banker at Eureka, Cal. He got the money on the note from James Harmon. Harmon was arrested, convicted and sentenced to five years in the penitentiary.

SUICIDES.

Nashville, Tenn., July 3.—Four suicides have occurred in this city during the past ten days, the last having been committed this morning by Mrs. Louise Herser, aged forty, who killed herself during an attack of mental aberration by cutting her throat with a butcher knife. The deed was committed, it is thought, before midnight last night at her home in Northwest Nashville, but was not discovered until 5 o'clock this morning. Mrs. Heuser was still alive, but was out of her mind.

CENSURED.

New York, July 3.—Kings county grand jury has censured Mayor Boody and the board of aldermen for awarding certain Brooklyn street railroad franchises to electric railroads and "sincerely regrets its inability to present an indictment against these members of the board of aldermen and his honor, the mayor, but under the law, as interpreted to us by the learned district attorney, we find ourselves precluded from doing so."

CAUGHT THE THIEF.

Port Huron, Mich., July 3.—During the past year large numbers of Eastern and Canadian letters have disappeared from cars on the Grand Trunk railroad between London, Ont., and Port Huron, Mich. To-day Chief Inspector Stewart of Chicago arrested Charles Ford, an employe of the Grand Trunk road, in the act of stealing letters from a postal car. About 300 money letters were found on his person. It is thought his stealings will amount to thousands of dollars.

ROBBED A DEPOT.

Paris, Tex., July 3.—The Starr gang robbed the 'Frisco depot at Chelsea in the Indian Territory, securing $350. A number of citizens discovered the gang just as they had completed the job and gave chase, but at this time the robbers are free. One of the robbers' horses was shot from under him, but his companions succeeded in picking him up before the posse reached him.

DEATH IN A MINE.

Duluth, July 3.—John Mibelich, an Australian, was killed a few days ago in the Chandler mine at Ely. He and his son were pushing a car of ore and it fell into the shaft, a distance of 150 feet. The man followed and was instantly killed. Mibelich was about fifty years old and leaves a wife and family, who are in Australia.

I have been troubled for several years with scrofula, caused by impure blood, but could get no relief until lately. Our druggist recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Blood maker so highly that I decided to try it and have up to the present time, used five bottles and find it to be all that it is recommended. —Orrin Stone, Otsego Wis,—For sale by J. The Chicago Mail says nearly all the attendance at the fair so far has been furnished by Chicago. Which seems to be a fact, and Chicago has nearly paid the expenses of the great show. But there is now coming a great change which will be very pronounced as the railroad companies cut down their round trip rates which is inevitable. Comparitively few Europeans have thus far come to the Fair, which is to be regretted. They have been governed by the maliciously adverse reports sent to Europe from New York,

The president has called congress to meet in extraordinary session on August 7th to take action on the money question. The president has labored hard to whip the Democratic party into line to repeal the Sherman silver bill and aid the English bankers in destroying the commercial value of the white metal, It is claimed that he has been successful, congress having been poled with the result that the bill will be repealed at once. As it stands now both the Republicans and Democrats publicly declare that silver is the cause of the present financial panic, with it out of the way and a gold standard only they claim that times will be good and plentiful. We do not belive it, and if not, how about the People,s paty?

One of the happiest social events of the season occurred yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock in the marriage of Mr. Leonard Holmes to Miss Edith Peters at the residence of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. O. H. Peters, Rev. James Moody officiating. The bride was charmingly attired in white silk with vail and white kid gloves and was attended by her sister Mrs. J. H. Cook and Miss Hansina Ihlsing, while like services were rendered the groom by O. F. Post and O. W. Peters, After the ceremony the many invited guests were regaled with a bountiful repast and all united in extending congratulations to the happy couple. Mr. Leonard Holmes, the groom, has been a resident of St. Hilaire for the past five years and has won the esteem and confidence of all who have come in contact with him through business or social relations, Miss Edith Peters, the bride, has resided most of the time in this village for the past nine years and has won hosts of friends by her beauty and grace who will wish her the happiest kind of a life. The SPECTATOR extends congratulations,

We saw Gov. Nelson, when in St. Paul last Friday, and asked him concerning the report that the drainage act had proved a failure, owing to President Hill of the Great Northern road refusing to put up the $25,000 therein required, and upon which contingency the validity of the act depends He informed us that he has himself called upon Mr. Hill in referance to the subject, and that while Mr. Hill was very courteous and talked very pleasantly about the matter, he did not offer a word of encouragment. We are also informed that the Attorney-General called on Mr. Hill in relation to the same matter, and Mr. Hill said the Great Northern owned no land in the Red River Valley that the Manitoba R. R. Co owned that portion of the old grant not yet sold; and that, as the drainage act provided that the Great Northern Railroad Co. should contribute the amount named, viz: $6,250 annually for four years, and this company having no interest in the matter, he could do nothing until the act is amended; and he did not say he would do any thing in case it were amended. And thus the drainage act goes where the woodbine twineth and the whangdoodle mourneth; and there is laid up in the archives of the state another relic of the beautiful and artistic legislation our state solons are noted for putting through.—Warren Register.

THE CELEBRATION.

Early risers yesterday morning awoke to find one of the heaviest rains of the season on tap. The rain commenced about five o'clock and continued until after ten. It looked slim for a celebration but by noon the clouds cleared away. A good sized crowd came in from the country in the afternoon and the main part of the program was gone through with. In the free for all horse race S. M. Dainard's horse took first money, J A Dainard's second and S. M. Hoff's third. In the oxteam race John Fongstrom took the first prize of a sewing machine furnished by S. M. Dainard and A. J. Anderson the second prize of 100 pounds of flour furnished by Marshall & Johnson. In the bare back ox race K. Swenson took first prize and Carl Rolland second. These races proved to be the most laughable of all. In the team race one team turned off at Olson's for a lunch at the hay stack and could not be coaxed to finish. In the bare back race an ox gave the crowd a sample of bucking that would make a broncho blush. The rider was thrown but fortunately not hurt. Peter Sanderson took first prize in the free for all foot race and chas Fellman second. In the boys foot races A. Fellman, Axel Rod, J. Englund and Carl Carlson were winners. In the farmers foot race Herman Peterson came in first and Ole Loe second, In the potatoe race Axel Rod first and Chas. Fellman second. Cracker race Axel Rod first, David Swenson second and John Petterson third. The tug of war, S, M. Dainard and H. E. Ives captains with ten men each was won by Ives. The fun in the evening had barely commenced when we were favored with another good rain, but as soon as it cleared off dancing was resumed in the bowery and continued until morning. The celebration was a success notwithstanding the dampness and it has encouraged our citizens so that another year we intend to do much better,

Dan Patterson.

Denver, Col. June 28th.—A prominent member of the clearing house association today, in speaking of the silver situation, said:

"The closing of the mints to silver coinage in India will precipitate the settlement of the silver question. Viewed from this standpoint it is not to be regretted. It will not weaken the cause of silver nor will it shake the confidence of the friends of free coinage in ultimate success. The money changers have but one more point to gain and that is to secure the repeal of the Sherman silver act. With that accomplished, every impediment that they have declared obstructed the paths of prosperity will have been swept away and general relief to the people of the whole world will be the [illegible] result. Instead of this however, universal ruin and bankruptcy will follow, and the people will take the remedy into their own hands, and that remedy will be of the heroic order. It may well be doubted if it would be good policy to oppose the people's demand any further. The friends of free coinage will gain rather than lose by acceding to the last demand of the monometalists, for there will no longer be any room for controversy. There being no money other than gold, and it being controlled by a comparative few, it will only be employed to extort usurious interest for its use from those who must submit or be ruined. It does not require the wisdom of a prophet to foretell the result of such a condition. Ninety-five per cent of the people of the earth will then be made to thoroughly appreciate their relation to the remaining 5 per cent, and they will proceed to equalize things. Just what course they will pursue remains to be seen,"—Globe.

I have recommended Beggs' Blood Purifier and Cherry Cough Syrup several times and must say that I have been surprised and more than pleased at results following use of same. What He Would Do.

"What a lovely boy!" she exclaimed, bending an enraptured gaze upon a pretty 5-year-old playing on the green turf of Riverside.

The whole party paused and patted him, and a fat little pampered poodle nosed the youngster jealously. And the lad with his golden curls, blue eyes and aristocratic features was certainly a pretty sight. He was dressed in a velvet Eton jacket and cocked hat with an ostrich feather in it, and his fond mamma, sitting on the nearest bench, drank in the glances of admiration and words of praise as sweetest incense to her soul.

"Oh, you dear child!" cried another of the ladies.

"Come away, Fido. He won't bite you dear." Still the lad looked on the pudgy dog doubtfully.

"What would you do if you had a nice little dog like that?" inquired the lady at the end of the ribbon.

"I—I'd knock the everlastin stuffin out of him!" promptly responded the little chap. Whereat his fond mamma turned crimson.

"Come on, Fido," said the owner of the dog stiffly. But the rest of the party looked as if in hearty approval of this sentiment especially the solemn young man who was with them.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

An Alternative.

Briggs—I hear you made a bet of $50 with Tutter that you would kiss Miss Penstock before she went to Europe. Have you succeeded yet, old man?

Griggs—No, and there isn't much prospect of it either.

Briggs—Why, what's the matter? How did you go about it?

Griggs—I went right to Miss Penstock and told her about the whole affair—how I heard that she was going to sail for Europe, and some one made the remark that I would kiss her goodby, and then Tutter said he would bet $50 I wouldn't, and that I took him up. I explained the whole thing to her and told her I was a poor man. You see, old fellow, I worked on the girl's sympathies.

Briggs—Well, didn't you have any success?

Griggs (gloomily)—No, except to make it a draw.

Briggs—How's that?

Griggs—She says she will stay home from Europe.—Harper's Bazar.

He Never Tried It Again.

A brigade major serving in Gibraltar was in the habit of giving to soldiers who had indulged not wisely, but too well, a note addressed to the sergeant of the guard, in which it was written, "Please confine bearer."

One day an astute Irishman happened to be one of the victims and was handed the note and ordered to return to the barracks at once to deliver it.

On his way he met the brigade major's groom, and knowing the contents of the note asked him as a favor to take it to the barracks, as he did not wish to return for an hour or two.

On delivering it he was of course confined to the guardroom.

The major, on learning the truth, said no more about it, thinking it very smart on the part of the soldier, and never again tried it.—Spare Moments.

The Wrong Night.

"So you deny that you ever asked my client to marry you or that you promised to marry her?" queried the attorney for the plaintiff in the breach of promise case with a comprehensive gesture and an air of surprised incredulity.

"No, sir, I admit it," responded the defendant promptly.

"You admit it!" shouted the lawyer, leaping to his feet and casting a triumphant look about the courtroom.

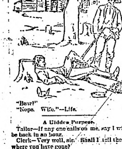
"Yes, I admit it, but the conversation alluded to occurred on Sunday evening, and I believe contracts made on that day are void."—Detroit Tribune.

One Sample Enough.

Newman—Come in a moment, old fellow! I want to show you a new invention of mine. It is the latest thing in pants stretchers.

Shockem—Excuse me, but I've had my share of that article, thank you. Old Bodly operates a very effective one. He tried it on me last night, and it not only stretched his pants but stretched me out on the sidewalk.—Boston Courier.

After the Battle.



"Bear!"
"Nope. Wife."—Life.

A Hidden Purpose.

Tailor—If any one calls on me, say I will be back in an hour.

Clerk—Very well, sir. Shall I tell them where you have gone?

Tailor—My gracious, no. I'm going out to buy me a ready made suit.—Clothier and Furnisher.

He Was a Tenderfoot.

"Are you fond of music?" he asked.

"Sometimes," was the answer.

"I have some duets in my trunk. Can any of you play at sight?"

"No, but a lot of us can shoot at sight."—Washington Star.

Where They Went.

Carrathers (in Waite's den)—That's a very pretty desk you have there, but I don't see any pigeonholes for bills and the like.

Waite—No, but you'll observe a very pretty wastebasket to the left.—Truth.

No Hurry.

Eaton Saltzer—Where are those oysters I ordered on the half shell?

Waiter—Don't get impatient, sah. We're dreffle short on shells, but yo're next.—Exchange.

The Accommodating Boarder.

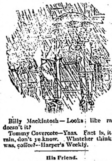
The boarder was grumpy that morning, and the landlady was doing the best she knew how.

"Bah," he exclaimed, "this coffee is miserable. It's the weakest stuff I ever saw."

"Well, Mr. Feeder," she said reproachfully, "you shouldn't jump on it so if it is too weak to defend itself. You should at least select something of equal strength with yourself."

"I will," he growled. "I'll do more. I'll take something stronger than myself. Where in thunder did you get this butter?" And the gentle landlady burst into tears.—Detroit Free Press.

These Needless Questions.



Billy Mackintosh—Looks like rain, doesn't it?

Tommy Covercote—Yaas. Fact is, it is rain, don't ye know. Whatcher think it was, coffee?—Harper's Weekly.

His Friend.

Dr. Liddell's morning levees were crowded beyond description. It was his pride and boast that he could feel his patient's pulse, look at his tongue, sound him with a stethoscope, write his prescription and pocket his fee in a space of time varying from two to five minutes.

One day an army man was shown into the consulting room and underwent what might be called the instantaneous process. When it was completed, the patient shook hands with the doctor and said:

"I am especially glad to meet you, as I have often heard my father, Colonel Forester, speak of his old friend, Dr. Liddell."

"What!" exclaimed the doctor. "Are you Dick Forester's son?"

"Most certainly I am."

"My dear fellow," exclaimed the doctor, "fling that prescription into the fire and sit down and tell me what's the matter with you."—Yankee Blade.

Not So Bad.

The manner in which the blue sash was adjusted about her slender waist confessed her at once the recent graduate of some leading institution of female learning.

The confession was corroborated by the faraway look in her eyes.

"And so"—

It was a man with a large red neck and an aspect of indifference to the stringency in the money market who addressed her.

—"my little girl didn't take first honors."

She tossed her head.

"Well I should say"—

She was decidedly impatient.

—"not. I ain't quite so homely as all that. Third place is bad enough. Huh."

And the girl glanced daggers.—Detroit Tribune.

A Common Word.

"Did you ever notice," said Hicks, "how men and women get hold of some single word which they use on every possible occasion?"

"I don't know that I've noticed it," observed Parker.

"I have," put in little Johnny Hicks. "Pa and ma have one they're using all day long."

"What word is that?" asked Parker, with a smile.

"Don't," said Johnny.—Truth.

All Spoiled.

Mrs. Tittle—Did you have a good time at the sewing circle this afternoon?

Mrs. Tattle—No, a miserable time. It was awfully dull.

Mrs. Tittle—Wasn't anything said about how Mrs. Blazer has been carrying on?

Mrs. Tattle—No. She was mean enough to be there herself, and of course the pleasure we had all looked forward to was spoiled. Strange how people can be so selfish.—Boston Transcript.

An Honest Wooer.

The Heiress—Why do you wish to marry me?

The Impecunious—You wish me to answer honestly?

The H.—Yes.

The I.—Without concealment or prevarication?

The H.—Yes.

The I.—Because I want you to be my wife.—New York Press.

He Had.

"Have you ever taken any pains to collect this bill against old Meddergrass?" inquired the head of the firm.

"Pains?" exclaimed the bill collector. "Pains, did you say? Great Scott! I have climbed a dozen barbed wire fences, been chased by a bulldog and picked half a pint of bird shot out of my legs. By George, sir, I have!"—Chicago Tribune.

Miseries of Managers.

Stage Manager—Great snakes! Stop! Don't move that scene yet.

Supe—It's most time.

Stage Manager—Don't touch it. Juliet is there dead in the tomb. If you move that canvas, it will let in a draft, and she'll sneeze.—Texas Siftings.

Must Have Been.

"How do you know that this is the same blind man you helped before? This may be an old fraud."

"John, how perfectly heartless and suspicious you men all are. Didn't you notice he knew me half a block away?"—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Mythological Information.

"Who was Ajax?" said the teacher to a pupil.

"He was a capitalist," replied one.

"How do you make that out?"

"He defied the lightning to strike."—Brooklyn Life.

Brief.

Magistrate (to prisoner)—Have you any remarks to make?

Prisoner (a barber)—Yes, your worship. Your hair wants cutting.

Magistrate—So does yours. Three months!—Tit-Bits.

Where He Had Gone.

"Where is the man who keeps this restaurant?" said the disgusted patron.

"He's gone out to lunch," replied the cashier.—Truth.

His Favorite.

Propinquity—She (sketching)—I suppose I could get your expression better if you sat a little farther off.

He—On the contrary, I was just going to quote my favorite hymn.

She—What is that?

He—"Draw me Nearer."—Boston Beacon.

Those Wide Brims.

Willie—Say, can I have that straw hat of yours when you get through with it?

Featherstone—Yes, Willie. What do you want it for?

Willie—I'm going to cut off the crown and use the brim for a circus ring.—Clothier and Furnisher.

DEATH ON MICE AND SNAKES

How Armadillos and Iguanas Secure and Destroy Their Prey.

The armadillo, as eccentric in his habits as in his appearance, does the duty of the domestic cat among the field mice, which are terribly destructive, says an article in the Edinburgh Review. Voracious in his appetite, he is sedentary by inclination, but he can find his game with very little trouble. Mice are always more or less abundant, though periodically and almost punctually their numbers decline, but in certain years they positively swarm. Then the dogs subsist on them; they fatten the poultry and great flights of fowl of the air are perpetually on the hover over their breeding grounds. As for the armadillo, he goes to work methodically, quartering the plain like a well bred beagle and sniffing the earth with perpetual acuteness. When his nose informs him that a mouse is near, he creeps up stealthily toward the spot; then slowly drawing himself up and making his spring, he traps the mouse, or a whole family of mice, beneath his body. But he does not confine himself to a mouse and insect diet. In attacking a snake he uses his impenetrable body as a weapon of offense. A friend of Mr. Hudson witnessed one of these encounters. The armadillo rushed upon a snake, which vainly sought to escape, and rocked himself to and fro on the body until the snake was cut up into sections under the sharp edges of the armadillo's bony covering. Should animal food fail the armadillo falls back upon vegetables, so that he need never take more than indispensable exercise, and can always keep himself in comfortable condition.

Another inveterate enemy of the snakes is their cogener, the iguana, or great lizard, of which Mr. Hudson tells a comical story, related to him by a Gaucho friend, who was riding carelessly along, letting one end of his lasso trail behind: "He noticed a large iguana lying apparently asleep in the sun, and though he rode by it very closely it did not stir, but no sooner had he passed it than it raised its head and fixed its attention on the forty feet of lasso trailing slowly by. Suddenly it dashed after the rope and dealt it a succession of violent blows with its tail. When the whole of the lasso, several yards of which had been pounded in vain, had been dragged by, the lizard, with uplifted head, continued gazing after it with the greatest astonishment. Never had such a wonderful snake crossed its path before!"

A Natural Mistake.

He registered in fine style, but when he asked to be shown to his room the landlord requested him to wait, says the Detroit Free Press.

"You see it takes some little time to change the furniture and get things ready," he said in a mysterious way.

"He must know me," said the guest as he walked off with a strut.

Pretty soon the bell boy told him his room was ready. He followed him to it, and found that every article of furniture had been swathed in quilts and the carpet covered with an old matting.

"What does this mean?" he asked of the boy.

"Dunno," said the imp with a grin.

Then he sent for the landlord and demanded an explanation.

"Oh, it's all right. You see we must protect ourselves."

"I don't understand."

"There'd be the coroner's inquest and all the muss."

"Good heavens, man, what do you mean?"

"Don't you intend to commit suicide?"

"Jerusalem, no!"

"Then why did you ask for No. 13?"

"Because it's my lucky number. Oh, ha! ha! I see. Well, just take this rubbish away and give me a chance to be comfortable. I haven't the least idea of shuffling off yet."

The landlord apologized, and had the room restored to its normal condition.

Water for Farm Horses.

It would be all the better for any farm horse if he could be given water at some time between morning and noon and noon and night. There seems to be a variety of opinion touching this point. It is almost a universal practice to give farm horses water but three times a day—morning, noon and night. There seems to be no better reason for this than that it is convenient to do so, and that it would be inconvenient to do otherwise as a rule. All agree that the horse ought to have what water he needs rather than what he wants. If left to go thirsty a half day after eating heating food at hard work there is no limit to the amount of water he wants, except what he will hold, when he reaches the trough. To fill up on cold water when the animal is in a heated condition is one of the most damaging things that can be done a horse, and yet because it happens to be convenient to let him do this, the practice has come into vogue. Most farmers could find a way to remedy the matter if they would, and it would be humane for them to do so, and profitable, likewise.

THE ONWARD MARCH of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Always, if you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure. In those scrofulous conditions of the blood which invite Consumption; in severe, lingering Coughs, and Weak Lungs, which "threaten you with it," in Consumption itself, and when other help has failed—this medicine is a proved remedy.

As a blood-cleanser, strength-restorer, and flesh-builder, nothing like it is known to medical science. The "Discovery" far surpasses nasty Cod Liver Oil and all its filthy compounds as a flesh-builder for those reduced in weight below a healthy standard. It is guaranteed, as no other medicine of the kind. In all lingering Bronchial, Throat, and Lung affections, and in every disease that can be reached through the blood, if it ever fails to benefit or cure, you have your money back.

Fowls in Summer.

As the weather begins to get warmer the lice will appear. To rid the hens of them is but little trouble, for the hens perform the work themselves with the dust-bath; but unless the houses are kept free of the lice it is useless to attempt to give the fowls comfort, as the vermin operate both day and night. Young chickens are often doctored when they begin to droop, simply because the breeder is not aware that lice are at work. But the question is how to effectually drive them away. Persian insect powder will do it wherever it is applied, but unless all portions of the fowl house are dusted with it, in order to reach all, they will again multiply. Coal oil effectually prevents their depredations, but this substance is not a safe one to use, for in the course of time the wood becomes saturated, and the dropping of a match or contact of a candle may cause a conflagration. A solution of some kind should be used—something that can be poured into the cracks and crevices—and the best substance for such purposes is carbolic acid. A tablespoonful of crude carbolic acid in a quart of water will kill not only the lice, but the species of bed bugs that also infest such places. It should not be mixed with whitewash, unless used for disinfecting purposes only, as the acid combines with the lime and becomes less effective.—Farm and Fireside.

WORLD'S FAIR BUILDINGS.

THE GREATEST WONDER OF THE FAIR ARE THE BUILDINGS.

Apparent Permanence and Superiority of Architecture That Has Never Been Attempted by Any Exposition—The Art Exhibit.

Jackson Park, Special Correspondence.—The ordinary spectator who visits the exposition often forgets or perhaps in walking around the grounds fails to have recalled to his consciousness that the greatest show of the exposition from an artistic and architectural standpoint are the buildings themselves. They embody all that is best in modern art as modeled upon classic styles and give the impression to those who stop to realize how great is their beauty and their grandeur the impression of placid and eternal solidity like that of the ancient Egyptian temples which have outlived even the Coliseum of the Eternal City. In respect to the apparent permanence of character, they possess a superiority which was not even attempted in the architecture of any other modern exposition. This is the verdict of the best artists with whom I have conversed native to two continents. The immense size of these buildings and the grand displays made beneath their roofs seem to dwarf all other world's fairs by comparison. Foreigners that I have talked with freely admit that for expenditure of money in erecting the largest buildings in the world's history and in conducting all things upon a gigantic scale, the Yankees have no rivals. Many of the foreign exhibitors, for instance, the superintendent of the Krupp exhibit, freely state that they do not believe that any other nation will attempt a world's fair to rival this in the next generation, because it would be impossible for them to raise the necessary sinews of war.

The space occupied by the buildings of this fair is over twice as much as that occupied by the Paris exposition of 1889. The areas covered by the different expositions since 1851 are as follows: London, 1851, 21 acres; Paris, 1855, 21 1-2 acres; London, 1862, 23 1-2 acres; Paris, 1867, 37 acres; Vienna, 1873, 40 acres; Philadelphia, 1876, 60 acres; Paris, 1878, 60 acres; Paris, 1889, 75 1-2 acres; Chicago, 1893, 160 acres. There are represented at this exposition against 37 at the Paris exposition. Everything else is on an equally gigantic scale as compared with all previous expositions.

To realize the wonderful beauty and greatness of the architecture of this exposition, one has but to stand in the great court of honor facing the gilded statue of the republic, with the great peristyle in its rear and the buildings on every hand, the like of which the eye of man never before looked upon. The Greek and Roman styles of architecture predominate everywhere with their graceful columns and magnificent archways, glorious in their symmetry, grand in their proportions and music to the soul in their harmony. In the words of one of the most eminent American art critics: "I do not believe that there can be any question but that this is the most imposing spectacle ever conceived in architecture. Look over Roman glory in marble, Egyptian grandeur and massiveness, Greek perfection in proportion, and harmony and ornamentation. Nothing equals this, because of the variety, size, strength and grandeur, in so far as it strikes the eye of the beholder. Perhaps Babylon in her prime might have equalled it—we have no means of knowing. Nothing that I have read or heard of could equal the scene from the great court, the point of architectural beauty and vastness and variety."

The same authority contrasts the Parisian exposition architecture with that of the Columbian exposition in the following terms: "The buildings of the two great expositions may be said to personify the geniuses of the two great nations. The architecture of the Paris exposition was light and graceful, like her art and like her people. It seemed to catch and crystallize into stone the gay effervescing and brilliantly colored life of la belle Paris. The architecture gave the idea of airiness, evanescence—built to last a day, highly colored and ornamented, but lifeless when the gay throng of pleasure seekers had deserted its courts, corridors and boulevards. It could have no permanent effect upon the architecture of the nation because it was clearly built for one purpose—to show what gay France could display to the comfort and luxuriance of the leisured and the cultured. When that was done, the beholder gathered the idea that the architecture was to pass away with the purpose which gave it life and being. Not such has been our purpose in erecting the buildings of the Columbian exposition. The Americans have also produced an architecture characteristic of their people. Everything here gives the idea of permanence, massiveness and solidity. These buildings typify the glory and strength of youth—the youth of the American nation, just beginning to emerge into manhood. These structures are mainly in the severely classical Greek and Roman styles of architecture, and are monumental in their effects. Here we depend for nothing upon the effect that great throngs or gay colors might add to the ensemble or architectural forms. Our aim has been to remove gay colors as much as could be done upon the merits of the architecture itself for effects.

"The Paris exposition abounded with ornamentation of a light and graceful character. Figures and reliefs of this nature were plentiful. Detached arches and columns and gateways gave abundant opportunity for the sculptor and the colorist. We have dispensed with much of this. It has been the endeavor to make all ornamentation [illegible] the form of figures of a severely national character to set off massiveness of design and proportion of [illegible]. There has been no attempt to create fanciful forms detached from the buildings which might be glorious in [illegible] but which would call attention away from the general design and excellence of the architecture. It has been the aim of the projectors of this exposition to make the buildings [illegible] far the [illegible]

Most Meritorious Display.

"The ornamentation is natural, chaste, severe, [illegible] of background rather than design. [illegible] structures would be great for centuries could they stand [illegible] the Parisian architecture [illegible] the representation of American forms and American life predominates. The grounds to start with have wonderful natural advantages, possessing as they do natural water courses upon which can be run all crafts imaginable with all their picturesque colorings and romantic associations. Natural beauty supplemented by the art of man will combine to produce a panorama of loveliness which the purely artificial beauties of the Paris exposition cannot equal. A characteristic feature of the grounds of this exposition are the statues and casts of animals and forms altogether American, such as the bison, the cowboy, heavy draught horses, cattle, etc. These are largely the work of A. P. Porter a rising young sculptor who came originally from the Rocky mountains. The great fountain of the Republic by MacMonnies is not as massive as the fountain of honor of Paris but it is a great work representing the ship of state steered by time and propelled by oars in the hands of maidens representing the thirteen original states. Columbia occupies the seat of honor and the basin around about is filled with the allegorical divinities of the sea."

The most attractive work of art to Americans is the great art palace built in the severely classical style of the Ionic order. It contains the greatest collection of pictures ever gathered together under one roof namely 7000 pictures which would require over one month's time to see, if three minutes were given up to each picture.

American Fine Arts.

There is a wide difference of opinion among artists upon all points of their profession, both as regards the philosophy and technique of their art. It is probable, however, that by far the best way for a layman to arrive at American fine arts, as displayed in the art palace of the Columbian exposition, and that of the other nations which have made a very elaborate display here, is by getting the opinions of artists upon the subject who are known to be qualified to pass judgment upon works of art. He will then be able to allow for all prejudices incident to artists as a class and draw his own conclusions upon the subject.

One of the artists whose opinion every resident of the Northwest will feel great confidence in is Douglas Volk of Minneapolis, who in recognition of his ability, was chosen as one of the national jury on fine arts for this exposition.

Mr. Volk, in response to your correspondent's inquiry as to what rank the American display of fine arts would take, said: "I regret to say that I have not yet see the American exhibit as a whole, only having seen a portion of the pictures while serving on the national jury; so I am in no position to give an intelligent reply to your question. What pictures I have seen have lead me to believe that the public will be greatly surprised to see the vast advance that has been made in American arts the last fifteen years.

"The country is yet too young to have produced any school of painting, new notes are being struck by individual painters and they are true and beautiful. Perhaps the very diversity of life in this country and the independence of the individual would make the formation of a settled school impossible, at least in years to come, when life with its forms of expression shall have become more fixed in purpose. But the tendency is in the right direction. Study of the pictures of the fair will show that most of our painters are serious and honest in their way of looking at and for things of nature, and that their attitude toward art is a dignified one is sure to lead to better and better results in the future."

The German commissioner of art here claims that the American masterpieces show less individuality than those of other nations and that it is almost impossible unless an art critic of rare acumen undertakes the task, to tell when he passes from the American exhibit to the French one, as they are arranged in the building, so closely have the Americans imitated the technique of the schools in which they have studied. One of the lady assistant commissioners in charge of the American exhibit in reply to this makes the broad statement that this is an indication that the Americans excel in art. The lady is fixed in her belief that the French schools now represent the utmost perfection in modern art and that if the Americans are able to so closely copy the French style, impressionism and all the rest, it indicates that they have learned their lesson well. Miss Hallowell, formerly director of the Chicago School of Fine Arts, also openly maintains the Americans have the best display of oil paintings in the fine arts building, mainly because they have exercised the greatest care in selecting and the most thorough means of collection of any nation represented here. Miss Hallowell in forming this opinion bases it upon the premises that greatness of subject, from the standpoint of ideality, counts for naught. In other words it makes no difference whether you paint carrion or an angel so long as you are a master of color and follow the dicta of the French school with a due spirit of reverence and fidelity. In other words, the Greek who would not take a mean subject for his art was a fool, and the Frenchman who painted a dead horse so that you could smell it, thoroughly understood carcasses as well as paintings. Impressionisms, in the lady's opinion, was a virtue in art because it was painting with a few strokes and showed the great skill on the part of an artist who could represent scenery by glimpses such as one catches from the windows of a rapidly moving railroad train. She believed that the disciples of Monet in America were keeping well up with the procession in the matter of impressionism, and that American art had nothing to fear in the way of comparison with the exhibits of any other nation. Miss Hallowell does not believe in a separate American school, because their work would be of a second-class art. The technique is a thing which constitutes the salient feature of modern art as it is known, par excellence, and the Germans, Italians and Austrians are left out of the comparison with French and Americans, because they have not the wizard touch only learned in the ecole des beaux arts at Paris. They are inclined to follow a little too much after the false prophets of the ideal in art and to paint great historical scenes [illegible] deep upon that of the old Italian masters, but he believed that no painter could receive the broad cosmopolitan taste, necessary to a great artist, until he had visited and studied in the best museums and art galleries of Europe. "The American exhibit here, however, is a revelation to me," said he. "I had never thought for a moment that the Americans who are considered abroad more or less in the light of copyists could bring together, even in their own country, an exhibit which very seriously competes with the best that the nation can do which the nineteenth century regards as the home of fine arts. The Americans have made a very extensive exhibit and the merit that many of the finest paintings display, such for instance, as "the Flagellants" is beyond question the result of genius of the very highest order. A broad sweep of the brush, the originality and boldness of treatment, although the technique of the French school, stamps it without question as the work of a cosmopolitan, the sine qua non of the master spirits of the artistic world. Naturally, all artists suppose that France would make the most excellent, as well as the most extensive, exhibit in the fine arts building because her commissioner had plenty of funds at his disposal and he had a world of art to draw upon. The result, however, has been more or less disappointing to all of us. I must candidly say that the honors lie, in my opinion, between of two separate schools of technique, more or less diametrically opposed to each other. Germany, with its slow, laborious, realistic detail—its working out of problems in art and America with its rapid impressionist, broad sweep of the brush, which often gives strength and power at the expense of nicety. Do not think that I sanction what is known as impressionism in art any more than I do a too laborious attention to detail. There is a golden mean, a happy medium in all things which only a genius can attain. There is too much striving after startling effects—the bizarre in French art. It is that spirit which is recognized in the proverb "Startle Paris for an hour and your fame is made." There are too many attempts to startle Paris, and often too few attempts to satisfy legitimate art and ones own conscience in art. The Germans have made a remarkably fine selection of the best paintings of the five best schools and the loan of twenty or thirty of their great historical paintings from the national art gallery has enabled them to round out a display better than any foreign nation has presented here. The Americans, however, have more pictures displayed and in certain individual artists, show a breadth of treatment, a character and an individuality, which entitles to a front rank. You would naturally expect me to speak of the Italian exhibit as the greatest here, but I am compelled to admit that ours is not a just nor a complete representation of art in Italy, with the possible exception of marbles in which I am of the opinion we lead all others. Some of our greatest artists are not represented here at all, owing to lack of provision on the part of the Italian Government of sufficient funds to make such an exhibit as I would liked to have done.

Taking the whole collection of paintings here from all nations, I must say it is the greatest in extent and the most meritorious that has ever been collected for a World's Exposition. It is a very great honor in my opinion for the Americans to take rank that they do in this the greatest of international art displays.

Reimhold von Baerle, commissioner of the German exhibit, was conservative in his opinions upon the relative merits of other displays. He regarded his own exhibit as the greatest from the truly artistic standpoint, of any in the building. Mr. von Baerle has no great respect for the French school of art, he does not hesitate to suggest that Americans have been wandering off after false gods in these many years, in studying so assiduously French methods and in patronizing the art of France financially and otherwise. The German commissioner said the German art was scarcely known outside Germany because it was the custom of rich patrons of arts to purchase and keep all fine paintings of their school in their own country. "On account of this feeling" said he "I would have found it impossible to make this creditable display, had not the German emperor come forward and secured the loan of a score of the best of our great historic paintings from the national galleries. Many other paintings were also loaned by the museums of Bavaria. It is a very unusual thing for the emperor to allow any of these pictures to be taken out of the national galleries and the fact that he did allow it, shows the great interest he has taken in this exposition.

My opinion of the United States exhibit is that while it has the greatest amount of space and is the most complete that it shows too clearly the influence of the French school. So much so, that you might think, unless you knew differently, that both exhibits had been made by one nation. The French style of art, with its rapidity, sketchiness and impressionism, often seems unnatural to us and unfinished. Generally we put in more work and pay more attention to detail in technique (not in subject), consequently I may be somewhat prejudiced in passing an opinion upon the American display which closely resembles that of France in technique. So great has been the slavery of Americans to French art that the names of our great artists, like Differger, Knaus, Von Uhde, Max, Liebermann and Menzel, the greatest of them all, is scarcely known in America even to your art connoisseur. I will say, however, that the pupils in the display here come very near surpassing the master who mainly taught them their skill, such as it is, in the very lines in which the French pride themselves with excelling all others. I believe, however, that such originality as American artists display in their works has been kept out of this exhibition by the jury who judged all paintings from the lines of the French school.

The commissioner in charge of the French exhibit was naturally of the opinion that the two great socities of French art had by far the best representation of fine arts in the exhibition. "You see," he said, "we have one society [illegible] which does not, and the rivalry between [illegible] competition as to which would succeed in getting the most paintings accepted by the art juries of the Columbian fair. We have thus [illegible] the largest and most meritorious collection [illegible] that they could make so comprehensive and complete a display as they have done at this exposition. It is a matter of great pride to us that the Americans have learned so well at our great art schools which are encouraged and supported by the bounty of our government. All other nationalities are obliged to send their best artists to our schools to complete their art education.

You ask me to say something regarding the prevalence of impressionism in the art of France and other nations. Impressionism is what you Americans term a 'fad.' It is a striving after new and startling effects. The full air, beautiful coloring, and rapid sketchy work of the artists of this school materially sacrifice to some extent the principles of drawing in order to produce striking effects in other ways. This 'fad,' however, is rapidly passing away in France because the best patrons of good work have tabooed and do not purchase this class of works. Take for instance the demand for fine paintings that modern art can boast of, and are willing to pay liberally for them, but the demand does not extend to the impression paintings. Pictures of this class were cheaper, and naturally for a time had a brisk demand. French art is not moving along impression lines at this time. It is firmly rooted upon the basis laid down by the Italian masters so grandly interpreted by Millais. Other nationalities who have absorbed some of the leading features of this school, like all students, are apt to magnify the faults of a school in their work and lose sight of its excellencies. My impression is, however, that it is a phase of art that will soon pass away with the peculiar causes that gave it birth.

A. Preyer, general manager of the Holland exhibition at the world's Columbian exposition, said that this was the largest collection of paintings representative of Dutch art, which had ever been brought together either within Holland or in a foreign nation. He believed it the best collection on exhibit also, because the school was founded upon the old Holland masters' works, such as those of Rembrandt, Van Dyke and other who lived in the sixteenth and seventeeth centuries. He traced the school down through Turner and Gainsborough in England and the Barbizon school in France.

I think that the Americans have made a wonderful display; that it is superior to that of the French, with the exception of a few masterpieces. I, as well as many others, are greatly disappointed in the French exhibit, and I do not think it fairly represents the temporary art of France. The impression style of painting in my opinion, is the result of the striving of French art after something new. It is a natural rebellion against all the photographic and other mechanical means of taking pictures at the expense of color. I do not think it peculiar to the French, for I see stronger tendencies in that direction in Swedish art as portrayed here and in American art than I do in the French paintings. If there is any tendency to originality in American work I think it is along the lines of impressionism."

A Lightning Calculator.

The accounts that have appeared in the daily press of the extraordinary performances of the French calculator, Jacques Inaudi, Labouchere writes in the London Truth, are in no way exaggerated. In fact, it would be difficult to exaggerate this man's extraordinary powers. He seems to possess an unlimited faculty of carrying and manipulating figures in his head, and the faculty is the more extraordinary in that Inaudi is an uneducated man, who is said not to have learned to write until he was eighteen or twenty years of age.

I witnessed the exhibition of his powers at the Hotel Victoria last Wednesday. His concluding tour de force comprised the working of a series of sums in addition, subtraction, multiplication and division and square root. The addition comprised six lines of five figures, the subtraction two lines of about eighteen figures, and so on, and of the two square roots given him to find, one was the root of a number beginning with 31,000,000. The whole mass of figures having been read out to him, Inaudi repeated them from memory, and then proceeded to work them out, which he did correctly in about six minutes.

While so engaged he answered questions put to him by persons in the room. He mutters figures rapidly in an undertone while calculating, which seems to bear out the theory that his mental process is based on a memory of the sound of the figures rather than a mental picture of their shapes.

Farm Improvements.

Upon many farms there are mowing fields presenting a spotted condition, made so by cold, wet pockets needing drainage, gravel ridges or knolls; sour slopes, whereby surface water descending from higher levels keeps the grass too wet for health, and other conditions that tend to reduce the productiveness of the farm or increase the labor upon it, as is the case in those fields where rocks and stones abound. To remedy these evils is afforded the opportunity for labor at a season of the year when there is no pressing need in any other direction. Regarding clearing of stones, there are many acres that had better be abandoned to pasturage than make the attempt at clearing, reserving the energies to be expended upon more favored fields. In other words, it is more profitable to improve good land and bring it into a condition that will pay a handsome profit than to expend labor upon fields that will only return a moderate yield of crops even after the labor performed. An amendment of such conditions as were first mentioned is productive of far more satisfactory results. A few weeks' labor in the drainage of a wet pocket, the correction of sandy or gravelly knolls by cartage and mixing with the soil that has been kept cold by moisture, all tends to a changed condition that gives great and large returns. Upon the question of drainage an enthusiastic farmer of New York who practiced it claimed that he could get pay for all necessary labor in the increase of the first successive crop, and even went so far as to recommend the adoption of a system of drainage upon all fields unless it was absolutely sandy soil.—Germantown Telegraph.

The contents of all the barns, including sixteen horses, were burned. The total loss is estimated at $75,000, on which there is but small insurance. George Conklin, a well known horseman, was the owner.

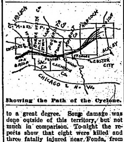
THE IOWA TORNADO.

EIGHTY PEOPLE KILLED IN A TORNADO IN NORTHERN IOWA.

The Village of Pomeroy Entirely Devastated by the Storm—Hundreds of People left Homeless and Without the Necessities of Life.

Des Moines, Iowa, July 7.—The cyclone or series of cyclones of last evening were the most destructive which have visited Iowa since its settlement. The storm was confined to the northwestern quarter of the state, and in its worst form followed very nearly the line of the Illinois Central from Lemars to Manson, a distance of 100 miles. The loss of life in this section will reach eighty, but it will be impossible to give any exact estimates as to this, or the injured or loss of property to-night, for the reason that, with the exception of Pomeroy, no town suffered to any considerable extent, and the destruction was scattered over a wide area. Much damage was done to crops and property east of Sioux City, in Woodbury county, and the counties east—Cherokee, Ida, Buena Vista, Sac, Calhoun and Pocahontas—were devastated to a great degree. Some damage was done outside of this territory, but not much in comparison. To-night the reports show that eight were killed and three fatally injured near Fonda, from ten to fifteen were killed in different parts of Cherokee county, two were killed in Wright county, near Clarion, and others near Alta. Gov. Boies went to Pomeroy to-day to superintend the work of relief. He has ordered tents from the quartermaster's department at Des Moines, and has issued a proclamation calling upon the public for aid. Meetings are being held in all the large cities of the state to-night, and large sums of money are being raised. The destruction of property, and especially of growing crops, is very great, but it is nothing considered with the greater loss of human life. One of the worst features of this phase of the storm's work is the terrible manner in which the bodies of the victims are crushed and mangled. In many cases portions of the bodies cannot be found.



Showing the Path of the Cyclone.

POMEROY ENTIRELY DESTROYED.

A Complete Wreck, With Not a House Left Standing.

Pomeroy, Iowa, July 7.—The town of Pomeroy is one complete wreck. There is scarcely a house left standing. About eleven acres of debris constitutes what was yesterday a thriving village. Splinters are all that remain. Pomeroy is part and parcel of the prairie, the death-dealing wind having left it barren and desolate. Scarcely a tree remains. Piles of broken timbers and an occasional piece of furniture are all that can be found of what were once the largest buildings in the place. Two hundred and fifty houses were in all destroyed, and the money loss on these and their contents is placed at $500,000.

Last night was one for Pomeroy that will never be forgotten by the survivors. Darkness followed quickly in the track of the tornado, and those who escaped death and injury were compelled to grope their way among ruined homes, guided by the cry of some poor unfortunate who was pinned under the falling timbers. Almost every light of any description was destroyed, and the people from Fort Dodge and the surrounding places, who were the first to reach the scene, failed to bring lanterns with them. The search for the victims, therefore, was necessarily slow till morning came. It was not until the first streaks of light appeared in the east that the enormity of the disaster dawned upon the people. They looked out where once stood a city and saw nothing but a timber-strewn prairie. Every residence to the south of the railroad tracks had disappeared, and the scores of houses that only a few hours before looked upwards were nowhere to be seen. Pomeroy had a wealth of shade trees, but this morning nothing was to be seen of them save a broken and twisted mass of limbs and roots. Horses and cattle lay dead in the streets, pigs stuck in the sides of horses and dead cats and dogs and chickens were scattered over the ground.

Pools of Human Blood

mingled with the mud at every turn, showing where some victim of the tornado had been tossed after the life had been crushed out of him. The air was full of moans and sobs and shrieks, and every other face met on the street was stained with tears. The people in Pomeroy seemed powerless to do anything for the sufferers, and it was not until this morning early, when the people from outside towns arrived, that anything was done towards recovering the dead and caring for the wounded.

What is called the postoffice building, but what has recently been used as a billiard room, was turned into a morgue, and hospitals were established in the remaining buildings, the largest being the Pomeroy hotel. In this improvised morgue this morning there was a ghastly sight. Billiard tables were turned into slabs, and on these the mangled remains of the dead were stretched out. Blood ran in small streams on the floor from the bodies that had to be stretched on it, forming a puddle of gore up to the tops of the attendants' shoes. Upon the tables lay bodies without heads, bodies without arms, bodies whose legs had been torn away by the cyclone, and bodies that were crushed beyond recognition by the falling timbers. On one table lay the remains of an old woman, a hole as big as a man's fist torn in the back part of her head. Close by was a baby not more than a year old with one of its legs gone and its little arm mashed to a jelly.

The tornado—for such it was—came from the northwest. All those who saw it agree that it was not of the funnel shaped species, but came bounding along the prairie like a huge ball. It was of a dark green color, and was accompanied by terrific noise. There were many who saw it when it was far out of town. These gave the alarm, and many were prepared for the monster when it reached the village. Most of the people, however, were panic stricken. They ran out of their homes and fled up the streets, crying and shrieking, until stricken by the flying timbers and whirling trees.

Safety in Cyclone Caves.

The cooler ones, however, and those who were nearest to them made for the two caves in the southeast part of the town, built especially for such occasions. In one of these caves were collected twenty-five people and in another fifteen. All escaped without a scratch.

It was pretty well agreed that the tornado struck the place about 6 o'clock. About half an hour before this it was exceedingly sultry, and save for a few small clouds there was no evidence of the approaching whirlwind. The tornado was of but of a few minutes duration and was followed by a terrific rain storm, which continued at intervals throughout the night. The path of the storm seems to be about an eighth of a mile in width and twenty miles long. The death list out in the country is heavy, and neighboring towns report many casualties.

It was not until noon to-day that the work of rescue really began. By that time there was a good supply of doctors, not large enough, however, to care for the wounded. The ladies at Fonda and Fort Dodge went out as nurses, and there was a plentiful supply of bedding and food. As rapidly as possible the injured were taken to the improvised hospital and given medical attendance. It was soon found, however, that the buildings used for this purpose were far too small, and efforts were made to lessen the number of patients in each. This was no easy task, for there was no place to put them. About this time, however, Company D, Fourth regiment, of Fort Dodge, commanded by Lieut. C. W. Hattan, forty strong, arrived with a fully equipped camp. Their tents were close to the hospital, and into these many of the sufferers were placed. They were not comfortable, however, for the sun was intensely hot and caused the thermometer to rise to 90 in the shade. Those who had expired during the day number a dozen.

A Relief Movement.

The National bank of Pomeroy has started a relief movement. People willing to act as nurses were assigned to the various hospitals, and here also provisions, money, bedding and clothing were received, and all of the necessaries rolled in rapidly. By 3 o'clock this afternoon the office of the bank was stacked clear to the ceiling with food and clothing and boxes of each were arriving on every train.

Gov. Boies arrived at 4 o'clock and took charge of the whole affair. He was first driven out over the ruins, then he visited the hospitals and morgue, consulted with those who had been directing things, and then issued a proclamation setting forth the needs of the sufferers and calling upon the people of Iowa to contribute liberally. The governor said the situation was far worse than he expected, and told the people that nothing for relief and comfort would be left undone. He ordered tents and said he would have a company or more of soldiers on the ground before long.

The intense heat made it impossible to keep the bodies of the dead, and those that were not claimed by relatives or friends and by them buried were taken away by noon and were placed in the grave yard by the officials.

Forty graves were dug and filled with dead up to 9 o'clock this evening, and at that hour the flitting lanterns showed plainly that the work of burial was still going on. There was much trouble in securing coffins and by to-night the supply of the towns in this vicinity had been thoroughly exhausted. Hundreds of willing hands dragged the dead and dying animals, with which the ground seemed to be literally strewn, to points on the outskirts of the town, piled them in big heaps and covered them with the remains of the houses and applied the torch. Fully a dozen of these strange bonfires were kept going all the afternoon.

Whole families were in many instances wiped out by the tornado and in houses containing from four to eight persons not more than one escaped alive. Husbands have been left without wife or children, children are left orphans, and there are fifteen women in Pomeroy who have neither husband nor children left. The grief of those bereft of those they held most dear is sad to witness. They walk up and down in front of the spot that marks the places where stood their happy homes crying and sobbing and

Refusing to Be Comforted.

Most horrible of all is the wail of little children robbed of mother and father, and in some cases of brothers and sisters too. The fate of the Loghrin family is a sad one. It consisted of father, mother and two children, both girls. Their house was reduced to splinters, and all save the mother were killed. The remains of the father were picked up beneath the broken pieces of his house, and the children were found buried under the ruins of a house 100 yards away. They were horribly mangled. Mrs. Loghrin also suffered severe injuries, being hurt about the head and shoulders. She is in the hospital, but there is not much hope of her recovery. She does not know the fate of her husband and daughters.

C. O. Davy, cashier of the Bank of Pomeroy, whose house was right in the path of the storm, is among the dead, likewise his brother, Ben Davy, who has been attending school in Des Moines. He came home to spend the Fourth, and intended to leave this morning. Mrs. Davy, wife of President Davy, of the bank, also lost her life. She lived some distance from the Davy brothers, and was in the house with the servant girl when the storm was seen approaching. She ran out of the house, intending to get to one of the caves, but had just reached the middle of the road when she was struck by the house blown from the opposite corner, carried up against a tree and crushed to a pulp. The servant girl, too frightened to move, fell on her knees and lifted up her hands in prayer. The house was torn to splinters, the girl was whisked out into the back yard, but she escaped with but a single bruise.

MANY FIREMEN DEAD

TERRIBLE HOLOCAUST ON THE WORLD'S FAIR GROUNDS.

Fire in One of the Building at the Exposition Results Fatally to a Number of Firemen and Columbian Guards.

Chicago, July 11.—A number of firemen lost their lives at the world's fair yesterday afternoon. The cold storage warehouse just south of the Sixty-fourth street gate caught fire in the top of the cupola, which rises fully 200 feet from the ground. Through this cupola the chimney passes. The cupola is built of wood overlaid with staff, and is highly ornamented with columns and pillars. Near the top is a landing. The fire broke out about thirty feet above this.

As soon as the firemen arrived about thirty-five or forty of them climbed up the ladders to this landing, and were preparing to throw streams of water on the burning portion, when the fire, which had eaten its way inside the staff to a point below where the firemen stood, broke out with volcanic ferocity on all sides. An exclamation of horror went up from the lips of 30,000 people who had assembled about the building to see the fire. Five of the men saved themselves by sliding down the ropes. Before others could follow the flames had burned away the ropes.

The unfortunate fellows who remained huddled together on the north side of the cupola were doomed. It was beyond the reach of any of the ladders, and the crowd stood horrorstricken and helpless to rescue the hapless crew. The flames ran higher and higher until the men were almost concealed from view.

At this moment one of the firemen sprang far out into the open air and was dashed to pieces on the roof fully eighty feet below. Another and another followed his example, crazed by the awful heat, and doubtless preferring to be killed by a fall than burned to death. When five had jumped the upper portion of the cupola gave way and the remaining firemen were swallowed up in the seething mass of burning timbers. The structure was entirely consumed, causing a loss of $650,000. Several other buildings were burned, but the loss is not heavy.

The following is a list of those who met death, the missing and injured:

Killed—Capt. James Fitzpatrick, acting chief Columbian fire department; John McBride, driver Company No. 8; William Denning, truckman, No. 8.

Missing—Capt. Garvey, Fire Company No. 1; Capt. Page, Fire Company No. 3; Lieut. Purvis, Fire Company No. 4; Phil Breen, pipeman, Company No. 8; Lieut. Freeman, Company No. 1; John Smith, pipeman, Company, No. 2; Paul Schroeder, truckman, Company No. 8; John Cahill, truckman, Company No. 8; Sergeant Donaldson, Columbian guard; four Columbian guards; H. Strand, Company No. 4; Henry Gedutdig, foreman of painters in cold storage building.

Fatally Injured—W. A. Mahoney, ladderman, Company No. 1, internally and legs and feet fractured.

Injured—Capt. William Barry, fireman; Frank Bielenberg, fireman; Sig. Nordrum, fireman; Lewis Frank; M. Murray, guard; George Davis, guard; W. C. Fisher, William Lynch, T. J. Donovan, G. S. Hayman, G. B. French, Fred Goetz, Frank Faulkner, fireman; Capt. Kennedy, Company No. 5.

Four other firemen, hands badly burned, treated at emergency hospital and taken away by their friends before their names could be ascertained.

Several bodies were recovered from the ruins, but they could not be identified. The death list will amount to twenty-five, and possibly many more.

THREE WERE FRAUDS.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 11.—Some very crooked work has just been shown up in connection with the loaning of permanent school funds of the state. The shady work was lighted up by some annual reports of the auditors of several counties submitted to Land Commissioner Thomas H. Ruth. The law strictly provides that counties shall invest permanent school money in the bonds of school corporations or first mortgage on good improved farm lands, no farm loan to exceed $500 to one man, nor shall it exceed one-half the value of the land as assessed. Seven or eight counties, the names of which Commissioner Ruth refuses to give up pending investigation, have violated the law and constitution in many instances. In one county the commissioners loaned $2,500 on a tract of land assessed at 933, $1,500 on land assessed at $840. In this county $3,100 was loaned, twenty-five loans being illegal. The constitution of the state holds the county responsible for the loss accrued in this way. Commissioner Ruth will investigate the matter thoroughly and will in the meantime hold up the $100,000 not loaned of the $500,000 in the permanent school fund of the state.

CHOLERA.

New York, July 11.—Miss Annesley Kenealy, appointed judge of the hygienic section of the world's fair by the ladies' committee of the royal commissioners, arrived here yesterday on the steamship New York from Southampton. Miss Kenealy is widely known in medical circles. "You need not be a bit surprised if you have cholera right at your doors in the fall or before," said Miss Kenealy. "You were very fortunate last year in escaping it, and I fear you cannot this year. What I say to you may be unpleasant, but it is best to be warned in time. There are already 2,000 cases in Mecca, and it is getting a big foothold in France."

SECRETARY SMITH.

TRIED TO HANG HIM.

Grand Forks, N. D., July 11.—Bomberger, the murderer of the Kreider family, is at last safely behind the bars of the Grand Forks county jail, after a most exciting experience, having run the gauntlets of two mobs, one of Cando citizens and the other of Devils Lake citizens, both determined to avenge the horrible deed by lynching. Although an effort had been made here to keep it from the public that the prisoner would be brought here, several telegrams arrived here from Devils Lake and Cando urging the citizens to be on hand to lynch the prisoner when he was taken from the train. A party of Cando citizens, who were on the train coming here, had a rope with which to hang the prisoner, and attempted to take him away from the officers on the train, but without success.

Devils Lake, N. D., July 11.—Murderer Bomberger, who is in jail here, admits the murder, saying the impulse came over him while he was currying horses. He intended killing the whole family, but the eldest girl pleaded so hard he concluded to let her live, after forcing her to submit to him twice. He said to the youngest one after shooting her: "Lay there and die like a cat." The prisoner is probably safe here, unless the mob from Cando following arrives. Company D, North Dakota National Guard, was called out by request of Sheriff Barton, under orders of Gov. Shortridge, and a detachment sit on the court house steps with loaded guns guarding the jail. Sheriff McCune had a long, arduous chase and reached Deloraine just twenty minutes behind Bomberger, who was eating. Looking up, the latter said, "Hello, Jack, I gave you quite a chase." He was perfectly cool and collected. It is reported that a party of determined men are coming from Cando to lynch Bomberger.

Later—Bomberger has been taken to Grand Forks to prevent a possible lynching.

DYNAMITE EXPLOSION.

Denver, July 11.—Almost the entire city was shocked by the explosion of 8,000 pounds of dynamite in a storehouse in South Denver. People were aroused from their beds from the concussion in the section of the city where the explosion occurred. There was a general destruction of window panes and many doors were blown from their hinges. Two men are supposed to have been blown to pieces. Particles of clothing and a revolver were found near the scene. What caused the accident is not known, but it is supposed to have been the work of tramps.

THANKS OF A QUEEN.

London, July 11.—The queen has made public a letter thanking her people for their demonstrations of loyalty and affection during the recent celebration of the duke of York's marriage to Princess May of Teck. She says: "I have been gratified and touched by the loyalty and devotion to myself and my family, so strikingly evinced at the marriage of my beloved grandson. In weal or woe, I have ever met the warmest and kindest sympathy. I know that my people are aware how truly my heart beats for them in all their joys and sorrows. In this lie lies the real strength of the empire."

FOR EMBEZZLEMENT.

Buffalo, N. Y., July 11.—Erie Ontario Van Brocklin, secretary of the board of fire commissioners, was arrested to-day, charged with embezzling a sum said to be over $50,000. He was taken to the mayor's office, where he made a confession and was taken to police headquarters and locked up. Van Brocklin's methods has been to add fictitious names to the fire department pay roll.

TRIED TO ESCAPE.

Ionia, Mich., July 11.—An organized attempt was made by the furniture crew of the state house of correction to escape. As a result of which a prisoner named Oscar Miller, sent from Detroit, lies dead, and Fagar, from Grand Rapids, is mortally wounded. Fagar was badly clubbed, as was C. F. Jones.

TOOK RAT POISON.

RUSSIAN CROPS.

St. Petersburg, July 11.—The last crop report issued by the department of agriculture indicates that the prospects of winter and summer wheat have improved vastly since the beginning of June.

A STORM IN CHICAGO

ONE OF THE WORST BLOWS EXPERIENCED IN YEARS.

Many Pleasure Boats on Lake Michigan Capsized—Four Lives Known to Be Lost—Many Narrow Escapes From Death.

Chicago, July 10.—Chicago was visited yesterday by the most terrific storm it has experienced for several years. The wind blew almost a hurricane and the rain fell in torrents. The earlier part of the day was well nigh perfect, cloudless and with a cool gentle breeze blowing off Lake Michigan. The storm gathered in the north and west with marvelous quickness. Nobody was looking for it, or expecting it. All at once it was here, and the next minute it was sweeping over the city, leveling trees and spreading death and destruction among the many pleasure boats which were out upon Lake Michigan. Owing to the beautiful weather during the morning and afternoon these were more numerous than usual. Many narrow escapes from death were experienced, but so far as known the loss of life is limited to four, and all of them were lost by the capsizing of the sailing yacht Chesapeake, which was overturned about two miles from shore. The party on the boat consisted of nine people, and of these, four were drowned. The dead are Ethel Chase, Themistocles Timballs, Harry Marlow, William B. Cornice.

The others were rescued. The life saving crew rescued a number of people. It is possible that others were drowned. Tugs in the harbor were busy for a time in picking up row boats, and no less than six people were saved in the harbor alone, but no lives were lost. At the world's fair grounds little damage was done to the buildings, but the passengers who were aloft in the captive balloon had a close call, and the balloon itself after being brought to earth was blown into pieces, and the pieces were carried out of the grounds. There was a panic on the fair grounds but no one was injured.

It is reported that the sloop Sea Gull is missing. She had on board at the time of leaving the dock ten people. The sloop was seen just before the storm and nothing has been heard of her since.

MURDER AND SUICIDE.

Wauseon, Ohio, July 10.—A horrible murder and suicide was committed this morning at the house of Frank Bayes, a well known younk farmer living about four miles southwest of this place. The victims of the deed were the husband, Frank Bayes and his twenty-six-year-old wife. Their four-year-old daughter narrowly escaped the ire of the murderous father. Mrs. Bayes was butchered in a horrible manner. The neighbors arrived in time to see the murderer shoot himself.

PENSIONERS DROPPED.

Pittsburg, Pa., July 10.—Four G. A. R. posts in this city met last night and decided to take up the cases of the dropped pensioners in this district. At the quarterly payment of pensions here last week 125 pensioners were dropped from the rolls in accordance with orders from Washington. It is the intention of the G. A. R. posts to test the matter in the courts, and Congressman William A. Stone has been selected as counsel.

ELOPERS CAUGHT.

Duluth, July 10.—Rev. Leigh Vernon, a revivalist of some note, and Mrs. Ed Pearson, the wife of a merchant of Pittsburg, Kan., from which place they eloped about two weeks ago, are locked up in the police station here, awaiting word from Kansas regarding their disposition. They were arrested at the Copliss house at West Duluth, having registered there as man and wife.

WILLIAM MAY COME.

Chicago, July 10.—That William II., Germany's young ruler, will accept the invitation of the president of the United States to visit the world's Columbian exposition is the declaration of a diplomat in discussing the situation. Herr Wermuth sails for home July 25. His recall is ostensibly occasioned by stress of business in connection with his office as privy secretary, but it is asserted that Herr Wermuth is called back to the fatherland to escort Emperor William to Chicago.

SETTLED LONG AGO.

London, July 10.—As contradictory reports are still circulated in Rome that the pope has changed opinions on the school question in the United States, the press correspondent has been authorized to make this statement: "In conversing with ecclesiastics at the Vatican, the pope declared uniformly that he entirely approved of Mgr. Satolli and Archbishop Ireland."

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

Chattanooga, Tenn., July 10.—The excursion of a merry party of picnickers from this city met with a sad ending at Chickamauga. One of the party, ex-Ald. John D. Crimmins, was killed and Chief of Police Dock Mitchell was seriously injured by a tree falling upon them.

TWO DROWNED.

Stoneboro, Pa., July 10.—While four Pittsburg excursionists were taking a boat ride on Sandy lake to-day the boat capsized and Joseph Bishop and John Lyons were drowned. The others were rescued.

SENTENCED.

Omaha, July 10.—C. W. Mosher, president of the defunct Capital National Bank of Lincoln, Neb., was sentenced to five years in the Sioux Falls penitentiary by Judge Bundy, of the United States district court. It is estimated that Mosher embezzled over $200,000.

THEY CANNOT WAKE HER.

Prairie du Chien, Wis., July 10.—The sixteen-year-old daughter of J. Timmermann of Prairie du Chien has slept since last Tuesday, and all efforts to wake her have been futile. Several years ago she had a like experience. Consequently her parents are not uneasy for her welfare.

FANCY FOWL EXHIBIT.

Vermillion, S. D., July 10.—The Clay County Agricultural and Mechanical association has secured the services of T. H. Shellabarger of Iowa to score the fancy fowls exhibited at the annual fair to be held in Vermillion in September.

There is no disguising the fact that the crop prospects are not good. With good weather from now on we may expect about half a crop. In some places the wheat looks fairly well but in other fields the grain is very short with small heads and will yield seven or eight bushels to the acre.

Crookston is making extensive arrangements for the Polk County Agricultural Fair which will be held in that city July 27th, 28th and 29th. One of the prominent features of the fair will be the Northern Minnesota Driving Association racing meeting. One thousand dollars will be given in prizes and several fast horses will be there. Base ball and shooting tournaments and many other interesting features should make the first annual fair a pronounced success. All who can should attend.

Dan Patterson.

It is stated by a prominent eastern physician that he has as many cases of rheumatism during the brief strawberry as all the rest of the year. People subject to this complaint should, in his opinion, shun this fruit. The juice of the berry and the sugar used in its preparation create the acid condition of the blood upon which rheumatism depends.

One year ago the 4th, while the city was reveling in the enjoyment of a monstrous celebration some one discovered the fact that the stars and stripes had not been unfurled from the flagstaff of the court house. The 4th of July, 1893, was a repitition. Who is responsible? When patriotism becomes akin to negligence some one should be brought to account.—Crookston Times.

The crew working on the gravel train on the Red Lake Falls line went out on another strike last Monday. About fifty men struck asking for $1.50 per day instead of $1.25. The train crew staid here until Tuesday morning when they were ordered to Crookston. Many of the men here have left for other places to look for work. The railroad company if they wish to finish the work will be compelled to pay the price asked as it is getting near harvest time and laborers will be in demand,

We are creditably informed that a special envoy of the Red Lake Falls county seat schemers was in town a short time ago to offer to one of our prominent citizens the position of county commissioner of the new county which they propose to form, providing of course, he would lend his influence in the next election. The scheme did not work and they still have the job on their hands. The prevailing sentiment in this locality is decidedly against division of any kind at present.

Citizens should remember that the annual school meeting will be held at the village hall next Saturday evening at 7.30, The meeting will be an important one and all should attend, Bonds are to be levied, a director elected and several important matters will come before the meeting. Last year it was almost impossible for anyone to get anyone to attend the meeting and the parties who did not care to attend have been kicking about the actions of the school board ever since. Come to the meeting and do your kicking this time.

The failure of the Duke of Veragua was due to speculating on the Paris stock exchange. It is a pity that the representative of the house of Christopher Columbus should be strapped, but he had money enough before he began to gamble in stocks and there doesn't seem to be any particularly good reason why he should be the object of such unusual sympathy as is manifested in the effort to raise the money necessary to set him up again in a condition befitting his rank and station. Men will crowd up, however, to contribute to such a fund who wouldn't give a dollar to help a poor fellow who really deserved it.—Journal.

Nels Skoglund.

The Scientific American of the 1st instant contains several cuts of the great Ferris wheel which is now finished and adding its share to the amusement and wonder at the Columbian Exhibition. When Mr. Ferris first went before the fair commissioners with his plans he was considered to be a crank and was refused permission to erect it upon the grounds; but on a second hearing, when he had succeeded in interesting several prominent men in the enterprise, he was more successful, and the wheel is now a reality, and much more a wonder of engineering than the Eiffel tower at the Paris Exposition. Its diameter is 250 feet and its circumference 825 feet and when its 36 passenger cars are loaded 1,400 people can be whirled around its periphery at the rate of a mile a minute, or at any desired speed. It is certainly one of the wonders of the world.

Bill Nye met a farmer on the train who told him of his struggles to get ahead under existing circumstances and conditions. He said: "I've always hollered for high tariff to hyst the public debt, but now that we've got the public coppered, I wish they'd take a hack at mine. I have put in fifty years farmin'. I never drank a drop of liquor in any form. I've worked from ten to eighteen hours a day, been economical in cloz, and never went to a show mor'n a dozen times in my life; raised a family; and learned upward of 200 calves to drink out of a tin pail without blowing their vittles up my sleves. My wife worked along side o' me, sewing seats on the boys pants, skimmin' milk an even helpin' me load hay. Forty years and more we toiled along together and hardly got time to look into each other's faces, or dared to stop to get acquainted with each other. Then her health failed. Ketched cold in the spring house prob'bly skimmin milk and washin' pans and spankin' butter. Anyhow she took a long breath one day while the doctor and me was watchin' her, and she says to me, 'Henry' says she, 'I've got a chance to rest,' and she put one tired worn out hand on top of the other worn out hand and I knowed she'd gone where they don't work hard all day and do chores all night."

The gold organs speak frequently of "the fear in the public mind" that money not based upon gold will soon depreciate in value. Never mind the public mind. That is perfectly calm about all kinds of legal tender money, Silver dollars, bank notes and greenbacks are eagerly sought for by the farmer, the mechanic and the merchant and none of these have been heard to protest. The "public mind," is a fictitious factor in the sense it is used by the daily press. The "fear" exists in the Wall street mind and kindred minds that they cannot work their scheme to contract the circulating medium without making it appear that the "public mind" is behind it. The "public mind will rest easy about the doings of Wall street only after it becomes unbalanced or inactive.—Norman County Herald,

"It is no longer a question with me whether wheat can be fed to hogs with profit" said M. Hamilton to a Review reporter. "I have read of some farmer who said he got $1 a bushel for his wheat by putting it into pork at $4 a hundred and I bought thirty young pigs last spring just for the sake of trying the experiment. They averaged 120 pounds a piece when I put them on feed ground from equal parts of wheat and corn. This was March 1st and I should say they would average 300 pounds now."

The reporter figured that the result meant a gain of two pounds a day for each pig.

"Well they wont fall much short of it" was the reply. "I never saw pigs grow so. Yes, my wheat will bring me a dollar a bushel, but hogs are worth more than four cents now."—Rock Rapids Review.

Interviews with prominent farmers in this part of the county on crop prospects show a decided difference in opinions. A few contend that judging from present indications the yield will be phenominal, while others are just as positive that the yield will be light, There is no use trying to disguise the fact that the extreme warm weather and blighting winds of two weeks ago did untold damage. At a distance the grain has the appearance of being in prime condition, but a close inspection shows that it is light.—East Grand Forks Courier.

HIS START.

A Weird Snake Story That Happened to a Veracious Citizen.

"I got my start in a queer way," remarked a man of evident wealth as the drummer finished a story.

"How was that?" inquired the drummer.

"Twenty-five years ago," continued the successful citizen, "I was traveling with a sideshow, and the business went to pieces, leaving me its creditor for wages to the amount of $100, and no assets but the stock in trade. This was divided, and my share was an anaconda about 18 feet long and as big around as my body. It wasn't fat, though, I think, for air was about the only thing it had to live on for several weeks before the failure. Be that as it may, I took the snake and started for St. Louis, where I proposed to exhibit it. I had him in a box in the baggage car, and somehow he got out and started through the train on an exploring expedition.

"Just as he was crossing the platforms of the second and third coaches the couplings came loose, and there's no telling what would have happened, for we were going up a heavy mountain grade, if the snake hadn't twisted himself around the brake rods and railing and hung on. It was a big strain on him, but he stuck to it, and I'm a lawyer if he didn't hold that train together two miles and no doubt saved the lives of all the passengers in the rear coaches. They thought so anyhow and made me up a purse of $500."

The drummer coughed.

"What became of the anaconda?" he inquired casually.

"He gave me my start," replied the narrator. "You see, the $500 wasn't a drop in the bucket, but when we got the snake loose the strain on him had stretched him out 20 feet longer, and I went into St. Louis with a snake that no other exhibitor could hold a candle to, and if you don't believe me I can show you that snake stuffed and hung up in my hall at Denver."

The drummer got up with the air of a man who was uneasy.

"You ought to sell it for a telegraph pole," he said reproachfully and went out. —Detroit Free Press.

Five Great Men.

An artist should consider facts about the masters of his profession calmly and thoughtfully. He may reach valuable conclusions about himself. A certain musical composer of much talent and popularity—we will call him Smithkins—has a happy appreciation of his own work, as his friends all know.

So highly does he estimate Smithkins' compositions that some of his friends were much startled the other day when he said gravely, "Did you ever notice that the names of all the great composers begin with M?"

"M!" ejaculated his astonished audience.

"Yes, M," said the composer. "Mozart, Mendelssohn, Meyerbeer, Moszkowski—and Me!"—Youth's Companion.

"No Hard Feeling."

Emily's Sorrows.

Mr. Fondhusband, an aged New York widower, got married recently for the fourth time, notwithstanding he has a house full of grownup children. While the marriage ceremony was being performed, one of the guests, hearing sobs in the next room, asked one of the children what was the matter.

"It's only Emily," was the reply. "She always howls when papa gets married again."—Texas Siftings.

Died a Natural Death.

"Didn't you tell me some time ago that you had joined a society for the suppression of slang?"

"Yes."

"Do you belong to it still?"

"Nop."

"Why not?"

"No. Why?"

THE ESCAPE.

How a Young Lover Narrowly Averted an Expensive Trip.

"Darling," she said as she nestled closer to him and looked up with a fond gaze into the eyes of her lover, "you know all the preparations for our wedding have been made. The cards are out, my trousseau is complete, but there is one little matter that has not yet been settled."

"I presume you refer, dear," he replied lovingly holding her hand in his, "to our wedding trip?"

"You have guessed it, you dear, sweet boy," she cried joyfully, "and let's decide where we will go."

"Let me see," he said, taking out his notebook. "There's Niagara and Washington and Old Point and"—

"No, dear," she interrupted, "I don't want to go to any of those places."

"Perhaps you would like to go to some real quiet place," he continued, "where we could be all alone by ourselves. But, my darling, what is the matter with you? You are not ill, are you?"

Her face had become ashen pale. Controlling herself by a supreme effort, she said: "Can you not guess it? Don't you see where I want to go." And she whispered something in his ear.

Two hours later the figure of a solitary man might have been seen scurrying along the wharves in the lower part of the city. He paused a moment to see that he was not observed, and then moving swiftly to the edge of the black water without a moment's hesitation he plunged in, exclaiming ere he did so, "No World's fair for me!" —Life.

"Pore Moike, pore b'y!" ejaculated the visitor with a dubious shake of her head, and she departed to spread the news of Mike's mysterious ailment.—Youth's Companion.

And She Did.

A girl in a Maine village who made her home with her aunt was often disturbed by evidences of the old lady's indifference to everything but the welfare of her own material possession. One day, in going down cellar for some butter, she tripped and fell heavily quite a distance. The maiden aunt rushed to the door, and peering down into the darkness called out sharply:

"D'ye break the dish?"

"No!" thundered back the niece, for once thoroughly aroused. "No, but I will!" and she shivered it with hearty good will against the cellar wall.—Lewiston Journal.

Might Be So.

"When I was once in danger from a lion," said an old African explorer, "I tried sitting down and staring at him, as I had no weapons."

"Well, sometimes I've thought it was because I sat down on the branch of a very tall tree."—Tit-Bits.

A LARGE DROP IN RATET TO THE WELT

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train sarvice to the Pacific Coast on the 18th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound wat reduced First-class from $60.00 to to Spokane from $36 to $30; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prebared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

OLDEST BOOK IN THE WORLD.

It Is Not the Bible, as Many May Think, According to a Writer.

Baltimore American: J. H. Mitchnler, in Knowledge for June, gives an interesting account of the oldest book in the world. Many will suppose that the Bible is meant, but the most orthodox have never claimed that the earlier books of the Bible were written prior to the exodus from Egypt, while the "Papyrus Prisse" was written at least 1,500 years before Moses was born, and many years before the occurrence of the Noachian deluge. The book was discovered by a Frenchman named Prisse at Thebes, and presented to the Bibliotheque Nationale in Paris. It was taken from a tomb in which was found the mummy of one of the Entews of the eleventh, or first Theban, dynasty, which would prove that the manuscript was written at least prior to 2500 B. C.; but the book itself furnishes internal evidence of the date of its composition, and contains extracts from a work that was much older. It was compiled by the Prefect Ptah-hotep during the reign of King Assa. This potentate was the last but one of the fifth dynasty, so that the book must have been written about 3350 B. C., or considerably more than 5,000 years ago.

The precepts of Ptah-hotep, which give the title to the book, are preceded by passages from an earlier work written by Kakimna, Prefect to King Seneferu, of the third dynasty, which ruled before the pyramids were built, about 3700 B. C., which would make it if in existence now 5,650 years old, antedating, according to the old chronologists, and as some still believe, the creation of Adam in the Garden of Eden, or at least his fall from grace. The book is written in Hieratic and has been translated into French by M. Virey and into English by Prof. Osgood. Its main value is not as a literary curiosity, but for the insight it gives into the education and culture which had been reached by man at that early period in the history of the human race. Its writer, Ptah-hotep, was a prefect—a place of great dignity and responsibility under the ancient Egyptian kings. It was second only to that of the king—the same office which was held by Joseph, the son of Jacob, during the latter portion of his career, as told in the Bible. The prefect was a sort of Pooh-Bah, or treasurer, secretary of state and chief justice of the supreme court rolled into one, so that what is said in the book must be accepted as authoritative, so far as it goes.

The book upsets some theories concerning the origin of a number of philosophic reflections, for they are found here, divested of all rubbish, several thousands of years before the advent of the Greeks, who were thought to have originated them. Its whole tone is lofty, not relatively but actually, and would be creditable to a moral writer in the nineteenth century. It deals with individual conduct and the government of the state. Persons holding public positions are urged "to labor at all times to be true gentlemen, lest from their own defects of character they suffer the authority given them by favor of the Supreme Being to be weakened." Numerous allusions are made to the Supreme Being, and they are always in the singular number, proving, what has been claimed by archaeologists, that the religion of the Egyptians was monotheistic, and that only among the ignorant classes were birds and beasts and images—which were intended by the religion as types of certain of God's attributes—worshiped as gods. Moses, who was really a prince in Egypt so far as his social standing went, was educated by the priests, and of course, well understood the monotheistic character of the Egyptian religion; but he saw that the masses of the people had so prostituted their religion that he was anxious to get the Hebrews as far away from their pernicious example as possible. But it is reasonable to suppose that in the age of Ptah-hotep, the writer of this book, nearly 2,000 years before Moses was born, there had been no such perversion of their religion by the Egyptians as disgusted the great lawgiver of the Israelites.

This book, it must be borne in mind, was not an isolated example of culture and scholarship. It was the perfectly natural outcome of a civilization which was scarcely inferior to that of a century ago, and which could boast of magnificent libraries, "a people highly instructed in all the arts of peace, a state carefully organized, a hierarchy firmly founded, minutely divided, and organized even to the smallest external matters, a universally diffused system of writing and the common use of papyrus—in short, a civilization which in all essential points has already attained its full maturity, and only by close investigation is further development in some directions discovered." And all this was many hundreds of years before Abraham, under the guidance of the Lord, became an exile from his country and settled in the plain of Mamre.

The Navajoes Would Be Formidable Foes.

It is the opinion of men familiar with the character of the Navajo Indians that a war with them will prove to be a serious business for the government. The tribe numbers about 80,000, of whom 9,000 are fighting warriors. The reservation where they are intrenched is rough and difficult, and contains many passes where, according to one authority, "two Indians can hold their ground against the entire United States army." The Navajoes have trained their ponies to go without water for two days, if necessary. The whole tribe is armed with the most approved repeating rifles, and the bucks have been storing ammunition for years in anticipation of trouble. The Navajoes have a perfect system of signals and scouts, and are always informed hours in advance of the movements of troops sent against them.—Argonaut.

MEMORIES OF FORT FISHER.

Buried Thirty-Six Hours in the Debris When the Fort Blew Up.

The funeral of Joseph Nelson took place in Oakland last week, and when the coffin was lowered into the grave he was buried for the second time. The first burial was twenty-seven years ago, when he was entombed alive at the explosion of Fort Fisher, when he was buried in the debris for thirty-six hours before he was found, and then he was dug out for dead, says the San Francisco Examiner.

Joseph Nelson was then a lad of 21, a volunteer in Company F of the Sixteenth New York regiment, and attached to Gen. Benjamin F. Butler's division. He was at the storming of Fort Fisher under Gen. Ames with a fleet under the command of Admiral Terry. Fort Fisher was captured, and when the Union forces took possession the fort was blown into the air and the Union troops with it. Mr. Nelson was buried many feet under the ruins, and it was thirty-six hours before he was found. He was paralyzed from the burial and became a sufferer from sciatic rheumatism for his entire life from the effects of the shock and exposure. He never recovered, but was for a while able to perform the duties of a conductor on a light run on the Southern Pacific railroad.

Mr. Nelson was not always willing to tell of his unusual experience of being buried alive for such a length of time. He was very graphic in his account, however, and this is the way he told it shortly before his death:

"It all seemed like a nightmare or the things one fancies while in a fever. Fort Fisher seemed to be on top of me, with all the guns directed at me. I could neither move nor speak. Slowly I began to grow cold, so cold and numb that I began to wonder if I were dead. It began at my feet and crept up through my limbs and up my body until it almost seemed to clutch at my heart. I thought that it was death itself, but I could hear noise. It was very human noise, and sounds that told me only too plainly that I was still alive—the cries of the dying and wounded from the battle and the explosion.

"They were over me and around me—cries that made my already chilled body colder. I could hear them everywhere, it seemed to me, the cries of those in greater pain than I, for they were wounded and mangled, while I—I was only cold.

"I was buried up to my shoulders in the heavy sand of the breastworks, but my head was free. Over it some timbers and rocks had become crossed and jammed, and they had formed a roof over my head. This I did not know at the time. I could only feel the terrible cold that benumbed me, for the pressure of the sand around my body drove the blood back to my heart and left me without feeling.

"I could not move; my arms were buried in the sand and I was absolutely pinioned. I could breathe, and that was all. Then there came a great pain in my head. It seemed as if it would burst; and still I was helpless. I hardly knew whether I was alive or not. I was conscious, for I could hear the cries of the wounded; but that was all I knew save that I could not move and that I was cold.

"The fort blew up at 7 o'clock in the morning, and it was the following day before I was found and dug out, and all that time I was conscious but helpless."

When Mr. Nelson was found he was taken to the hospital at Wilmington, N. C., but he never fully recovered from the injury to his spine, and during the greater part of his life walked on crutches.

TWO INSCRUTABLE MYSTERIES

Wherefore the Invariable Routine of Washing on Monday and Cleaning on Friday.

I wish some philosophic sharper would tell me why the majority of women clean up house on Friday, says a writer in the New York Herald. I don't suppose the answer would be particularly thrilling, but the query invariably occurs to me every Friday morning when I am awakened by the cold draughts sweeping through the house and look out of the window to see all the curtains of the neighborhood tied up or drawn far asunder.

"Because it's an unlucky day," replied a housekeeper of my acquaintance.

"Because, it's hangman's day," said another.

"Because," said another, "it's the only day in the week we have to do it in. There's the washing on Monday, ironing on Tuesday, baking on Wednesday, calling or receiving on Thursday, and baking again on Saturday."

"Because," says another, "it takes six days in the week to get ready for Sunday, and cleaning house comes in in regular order. Anybody ought to see that."

But I don't see it. I don't see why a house should be any cleaner on Sunday than on any other day. I don't see why it isn't just as well to hang out the family wash on Wednesday as upon Monday. Yet I have known women who wouldn't have a flat unless they could wash on Monday. As five floors of two families each can't dry in the back yard and on the roof on the same day, and the Monday prejudice is very strong, landlords have to erect huge telegraph poles in the rear of flat houses, from which poles lines are operated on a level of each floor. This system also affords the additional pleasure of a near view of the number and character of your neighbor's family wash. There must be some substantial reason for a woman doing just as her neighbors do, and what all women in the civilized world do and have been doing for hundreds of years.

READY FOR INSPECTION.

He Was Smart and Decided to Get Ahead of the Mother-in-Law.

A shrewd young business man has a suite of bachelor apartments on Fourth street, which all indications say are to be bachelor apartments no longer after the middle of July. The other day one of his friends dropped up to see him in his den and found him busily engaged in some strange sort of performance with a large book. All about the room were evidences of a hasty rearrangement of furniture and the half-open closet door showed a heterogenous mass of "traps and calamities" familiar to bachelor's apartments, hastily chucked in there out of the way. The photographs of actresses had given place to family portraits, and James J. Corbett was out of sight behind a large picture of the late Phillips Brooks. But still the host went on rummaging through that big book, so steadily and industriously that the visitor's curiosity could stand it no longer.

"What under the sun are you doing?" he exclaimed.

"Well," said the host, with a genial grin, "between you and me and the gatepost, I expect a visit to-morrow from my [illegible] mother-in-law, and I am thumbing up my bible ready for inspection."—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

A NEW BONANZA FOR FARMERS

How to Double the Price of Wheat by Converting It Into Hogs.

St. Paul, June, 30.—To the Editor. The low price of wheat and the tendency to still lower prices, seems to present an opportune time to call the attention of the farmers of the wheat districts in Northern Minnesota and the Dakotas, to the high price of hogs.

At the present prices of hogs recent experiments seem to demonstrate that by fattening hogs on wheat, the farmer may realize more than $1 per bushel for his wheat, now worth at the farm 40 to 50 cents, and which after freight has been paid to Minneapolis or Duluth, is worth only about 62 or 63 cents. At present prices, the largest car load of wheat (1,000 bushels) in St. Paul, is worth only about $620, while a car load of hogs of the same weight (60,000 lbs), would be worth about $3,300.

The hog matures at the age of six to nine months. Hence if it is true that 50 cents wheat when turned into pork becomes worth more than $1 a bushel, the business of raising hogs by the wheat farmer promises large profits and quick returns.

Now let us see what evidence there is upon the value of wheat for fattening hogs.

Upon this point the following statement has been made: A farmer in one of the best corn and wheat counties in Central Illinois was so reluctant the past season to sell his wheat at the prevailing prices that he thought he would try to convert it into pork. He was greatly pleased at the result. He had $2,000 worth of hogs, and fattened them almost entirely on wheat, using a little corn. His method was to soak his wheat in warm water twenty-four hours before feeding. In cold weather he let the water come to a boil in the kettle and then poured in the wheat and put out the fire. When it cooled it was soaked enough and ready to feed which he did immediately. He weighed the hogs before commencing to feed and kept a strict account of the weights of all grain fed; also figured the corn at 35 cents and the fat hogs at 4 1-2 cents. Said he, "the wheat just brought me $1.01 per bushel."

From this statement it would seem that wheat is worth $1.01 per bushel to feed when hogs are worth 4 1-2 cents per pound. The present price of hogs in the St. Paul market is 5.0 cents, which on the above basis would make wheat worth $1.25 per bushel.

The writer is informed that during the last few months 24 full car loads of fat hogs have been sold at the South St. Paul market, which were raised in Northern Dakota and fattened entirely on wheat, sometimes fed in the manner pointed out by the Illinois farmer and sometimes converted into a rude "graham flour" before feeding. The unanimous testimony of the raisers has been to the effect that by feeding it, they had realized over $1 per bushel for their wheat. The quality of the product of such hogs is said to be superior to the product of the corn-fed animals. If this is true it seems to open up the possibility to the wheat farmers of introducing to the markets of the world a brand of American pork, which in time would become as famous as Minnesota hard wheat, and like it command the highest prices and the best markets.

It is certainly a matter worthy of consideration. —A. B. Stickney.

(Barley is said to be equally as good for hogs as corn or wheat, and should be fed in the same way. At South St. Paul there is an unlimited market for hogs, 1,000,000 being required for this year's packing.—Editor.)

AGE AND BEAUTY.

Time at Which Woman's Charms and Graces Prove Most Attractive.

The physical beauty of women should last until they are past 50. Nor does beauty, remarks Science Siftings, reach it zenith under the age of 35 or 40. Helen of Troy came upon the stage at the age of 40. Aspasia was 36 when married to Pericles, and she was a brilliant figure thirty years thereafter. Cleopatra was past 30 years when she met Antony. Diane de Poictiers was 36 when she won the heart of Henry II. The king was half her age, but his devotion never changed. Anne of Austria was 38 when described as the most beautiful woman in Europe. Mme. de Maintenon was 43 when united to Louis, and Catherine of Russia 33 when she seized the throne she occupied for thirty-five years.

Mlle. Mar was most beautiful at 45, and Mme. Recamier between the ages of 35 and 55. The most lasting and intense passion is not inspired by two decade beauties. The old saw about sweet 16 is exploded by the truer knowledge that the highest beauty does not dwell in immaturity. For beauty does not mean alone the fashion of form and coloring as found in the waxen doll. The dew of youth and a complexion of roses sometimes combine in a face that is unmoving and unresponsive, as though lacking utterly the life sparkle. A woman's best and richest years are from 26 to 40. It is arrant error for any woman to regard herself as passe at an earlier day.

In the course of years, however, a time arrives when the coming of age must be recognized, when the muscles begin to relax, the skin to lose its polish and roundness, and softness gives place to angles. Contentment and good humor will still outrival all medical inventions as a preservative of youth. A woman beautiful in all else, but wanting mirth, will grow old, sour, thin and sallow, while the merry, fun-loving spite life's happenings and sorrows.

Electricity Direct From Coal.

One of the philosopher's stones of electrical inventors is the problem of obtaining the direct control of the energy which is stored up in coal, so that it may be employed without waste and at a very small margin of cost—in other words, that it may be turned directly into electricity without using steam engines and boilers, the present necessary intermediaries. Ninety per cent of the energy that exists in coal is now lost in converting it into power. It goes off in heat through the chimneys of boiler rooms, and is perceived in any room where there is a furnace and boiler. A means of saving this waste will vastly cheapen the cost of everything which is manufactured by electric or steam power, as well as of all the luxuries and necessaries of life, [illegible]

WITH HEAD TO NORTH.

The Proper Way to Sleep According to Some Authorities.

There appears to be foundation for the idea that sleeping with the head pointed northward is beneficial. Many people claim to have been benefited by observing the rule, and a London editor is quoted by the Brooklyn Eagle as saying recently: "Years ago I suffered from nervous irritation and consequent loss of sleep. I fancied I slept better in certain rooms than in others and, after trying to ascertain why, came to the conclusion that a great deal depended upon the position of the bed. For twenty-five years I have had my bed placed with the head to the north, or as near that point as I can get, and I have found great advantage in doing so." In 1882 a writer in the Revue Philosophique said: "Is there, then, an agency capable of exercising a continuous action on the apparatus of the nerves, varying with the position of the head? To my mind this agency exists and is none other than terrestrial magnetism. It is beyond dispute that galvanic currents not only exercise a powerful effect on our nervous system, but the electro magnets themselves produce well marked effects in certain nervous affections." To this the author adds the note: "I have this fact from M. Nordstrom, Swedish consul at Alger: Dr. Julius Von dem Fischweiler, a physician at Madgeburg, who died lately, asserts in his will that his own great age (100 years) is to be ascribed entirely to his constant habit of sleeping with his head to the north." Probably the benefits to be derived from the position of one's bed are wholly imaginary, but many persons have tried it and testify to a sense of benefit from the change to that position from a previous one. A very eminent physician said on this subject: "My opinion is that it is a piece of nonsense worthy of some superstitious old lady. I would rank it with fortune telling and table wrapping." Hindoos, Russians and Japanese are opposed to sleeping with their heads to the north, but their objections are based on superstitious grounds.

MR. AND MRS. WADSWORTH.

Neither Was Remarkable for Beauty—An Incident.

Mrs. Wordsworth, with all her beauty of expression, was undoubtedly a plain woman; and this is what may be called putting the fact into plain language. But if she could make no boast of good looks, neither was the poet himself remarkable for beauty of feature or comeliness of form; while his extreme inattention to little matters of detail in dress was always more or less marked, says a writer in the Cornhill Magazine.

I cannot forbear quoting an amusing incident lately told me by an old friend, (a grandniece of Mrs. Wordsworth), who, when a child in her parents' home at Durham, remembers one afternoon an announcement being made to her mother that a man wished to speak to her, and that as he appeared very tired and seemed to have walked a long distance he had been accommodated with a seat in the kitchen. My friend's mother, like most country residents, was not unaccustomed to interviewing people of all sorts and conditions, and having finished the letter upon which she was engaged, proceeded leisurely to the kitchen, expecting perhaps some application for employment, or, possibly, to hear a tale of sickness or distress among her humbler neighbors. Her dismay may be imagined when, seated hat in hand upon a Windsor chair, and absently contemplating the weights of the Dutch clock upon the opposite wall, she discovered the poet laureate.

My informant, who was scarcely of an age to appreciate the beauty of the poet's conversation, confesses to an industrious though fruitless attempt on her part to count the number of buttons missing from the distinguished visitor's gaiters on this interesting occasion.

Rare Elements Electrically Isolated

At the May meeting of the French Academy of Science, M. Morssan laid before the members specimens of rare metals produced by the voltaic arc. Instead of employing, as in his first trials, a 300 volt 50 ampere dynamo, he now uses an arc of 60 to 70 amperes and 1,000 volts. Among these specimens (each weighing about 200 grammes) M. Morssan showed the metals tungsten, molybdenum, zirconium and vanadium. All of these are able to absorb large quantities of carbon; vanadium, for instance, absorbs up to 25 per cent. It is also extremely hard and easily cuts glass and rubies. By employing the same process, M. Morssan was enabled to produce the vapor of silicium and zirconium, which quickly condenses in drops upon vitreous surfaces. May we expect that further researches in this direction will result in the isolation of more elements?

THE EYES OF BEES.

Their Immense Size Supposed to Hep Them in Their Flight.

The directness of a bee's flight is proverbial. The shortest distance between any two given points is called a bee line. Many observers think that the immense eyes with which the insect is furnished greatly assist, if they not entirely account for, the arrowy straightness of its passage through the air.

Every bee has two kinds of eyes—the two large compound ones, looking like hemispheres, on either side, and the three simple ones which crown the top of the head. Each compound eye is composed of 3,500 facets—that is to say an object is reflected 3,500 times on its surface.

Every one of these facets is the base of an inverted hexagonal pyramid, whose apex is fitted to the head. Each pyramid may be termed an eye., for each has its own iris and optic nerve.

How these insects manage this marvelous number of eyes is not known. They are immovable, but mobility is unnecessary because of the range of vision afforded by the position and the number of facets.

They have no lids, but are protected from dust and injury by rows of hairs growing along the lines at the junctions of the facets. The simple eyes are supposed to have been given the bee to enable it to see above its head when intent upon gathering honey from the cups of flowers.

Probably this may be one reason, but it is likely there are other uses for them not yet ascertained. A bee flies much in the same way as a pigeon—that is to say, it first takes an upward spiral flight into the air, and then darts straight for the object in view.

Now an experimenter on insect nature covered a bee's simple eyes with paint and sent it into the air; instead of darting straight off after rising, it continued to ascend. Apparently, then, these eyes are used in some measure to direct the flight.

What Was Done.

During Stonewall Jackson's campaign in the Shenandoah valley it became necessary that a bridge over a small creek should be built in great haste.

One evening Jackson went for his old pioneer captain, Myers by name, and pointed out to him the urgency of the occasion, saying that he would send him the plan of his colonel of engineers as soon as it was done.

Next morning Jackson rode down to Capt. Myers' quarters, and saluting the veteran, said: "Captain, did you get the plan of the bridge from Colonel ——?"

"Well," said the captain, "the bridge, general, is built, but I don't know whether the picture is done or not!"

Pushing Trade.

It is not alone in America that barbers show extraordinary persistence and ingenuity in pressing their wares upon customers. An American who has been traveling in France relates that in Paris the barber who was shaving him stepped two or three times upon the side of his foot.

"Exactly what I was trying to find out, monsieur," said the barber, blandly. "We have an excellent preparation for removing corns for sale at one franc per bottle."

AN AWFUL ACCIDENT

A STREET CAR STRUCK BY A TRAIN IN CHICAGO.

The Street Car, Filled With Passengers, Hurled Thirty Feet—Four People Instantly Killed and Many Injured, Some Fatally.

Chicago, July 18.—Forty-ninth street, at the crossing of the Grand Trunk railroad, was the scene of another accident whereby three lives were lost and many people injured. A Halsted street horse car was run into and hurled thirty feet to one side. It was filled with men and women, forty-six passengers being aboard.

The dead are Thomas Perkins, Margaret Murphy and an unidentified boy.

The injured are Mrs. Mary Vanderbeck, face cut and internally injured; very serious. Jennie Black of Davidson Station, Mich., scalp cut and lower jaw broken. Mary McAloon, back and hip bruised and internally injured. Mrs. S. A. Lace, bruised about head, face and body. Celia Mitchell, head and body bruised.

The passenger train was running at a lively rate of speed, it is said, and crashed into the side of the car. The latter was turned and then was thrown thirty feet through the air. Few of the passengers had any warning of the accident. Those on the footboard nearest the passenger train saw it coming and jumped in time to save themselves from injury and perhaps death. But the majority of those on board were carried with the demolished car and they fell to the ground together, some with badly bruised bodies, and others dead. Police Captain Ward arrested Engineer Jones, Fireman Campbell and a man named Henry Hughes, who was riding in the cab of the engine. They will be held at the station until the coroner's inquest.

Mayor Wittes' hardware store was entered and revolvers, razors, cutlery and other goods to the amount of $500 were taken. The burglars gained an entrance through a rear window. D. H. Koresdahl's tailor shop was entered and thirteen bolts of cloth, fine new suits and other goods valued at over $300 were taken. A. Flurek's tailor shop was also burglarized of several bolts of cloth, together with three or four suits ready for delivery, all valued at from $300 to $400. Saturday night burglars attempted to enter the Milwaukee freight depot but were scared away. For weeks this city has been infested by a gang of thieves and toughs. Many petty robberies has occurred, but this last was the climax, when no less than five stores were burglarized. Ten arrests have been made for vagrancy, but no evidence was at hand to connect these tramps with the burglaries. A large amount of the goods stolen from Luecks' premises were found in a manure pile near Hotel Kennard, and a portion of that taken from Korsedahl's store was found just outside the city limits. Thieves also entered the residence of W. F. Mason and secured a small amount of money.

STRUCK STILLWATER

A CYCLONE SWEEPS THROUGH THE BLUFF CITY.

Two Men Are Killed and Several Others Injured—A Report That a Number of Lives Were Lost on Lake St. Croix.

Stillwater, July 15.—Stillwater was visited by a cyclone yesterday, and two unfortunates sleep the long sleep which knows no awakening as the result of the terrible disaster. Others severely injured by the flying timbers are lying at their homes, where they are being tenderly cared for by their intimate friends and relatives.

The killed are William Anes and Sam Simonson.

Those injured are Aug. Nelson, face bruised and back injured; Frank Erickson, right leg bruised; Ole Westing, slightly bruised; Sol Stone, back hurt; M. Dupois, Savannah, Ill., scratched about the face; Louis Stoltz, cut and bruised.

None of those injured are badly hurt, and all will recover.

The heat has been very oppressive in this city for two days, and shortly before 3 o'clock threatening storm clouds were noticed in the west. They approached rapidly, and soon other clouds were noticed coming from a southerly direction. In the vicinity of the Lily Lake race track the clouds united, and at that moment a vivid flash of lightning was followed by a terrible thunder clap. People on the streets were frightened terribly, and their fears were still greater when they noticed the approaching clouds. The clouds turned and twisted, rose high in the air and then came down again, at last forming into a funnel-shaped cloud, which approached the city with great rapidity. Seemingly only the smallest part of the cloud struck here and the part of the cyclone was not more than fifty feet wide.

The cyclone swept through the town, demolishing a number of houses and barns. The Stillwater brick yard was wrecked, and then the rafting shed of the Atwood mill was wrecked. It was here that Anes and Simonson were killed. Several skiffs were overturned on the lake, but the occupants of all scrambled out upon the logs. Some were reported drowned, but this report cannot be verified. The monetary loss will reach about $20,000.

The crazy father picked one of the children up and dashed him against the wall and ceiling, inflicting injuries that will prove fatal. The entire village is up in arms and lynch law is strongly talked of. Two or more of the children will die.

SCANDAL IN LONDON.

London, July 15.—Considerable scandal has been caused at the Bisley rifle meeting by a champaigne lunch given at the Bisley camp by Mr. Winans, an American revolver shot. It appears that Mr. Winans entrusted a friend named Barker with the sending of the invitations to the lunch. Barker invited two women, and to this fact was due the trouble. Matters proceeded satisfactorily for a time at the lunch. Things became lively and finally culminated in a scandalous row. The attention of the authorities was called to the matter with the result that Barker was officially expelled from the camp.

Resolved, that the school house be used for the regular school and for no other purpose. In the matter of raising bonds to pay bonds falling due it was resolved to take no action but to authorized the trustees to call a special meeting for that purpose at any time.

Congressman Bowen—"I would issue $5,000,000 in legal tender treasury notes every year for three years and pay it out for services rendered and materials furnished to the government. That would make $1,500,000,000 and would increase our money a little over $7 a head each year, or $21 per capita in three years, which, together with the money now in existence, would make about $40 per capita. I would then pay up the national debt and stop the interest. That would destroy the national banks of issue and would make it more difficult for the banks to control the money, in fact, I think it would make it impossible for them to do it.—Daily News.

"State Auditor McCarthy, of Iowa," writes Mr. Ernest B. Gaston in a letter to the reform press, "in a speech recently at Council Bluffs approved the estimate that 90 per cent of the business in the country is transacted by means of checks, drafts or letters of credit, and only about 10 per cent with cash, and he (McCarthy) deduces the conclusion that confidence forms a very large and important part of the foundation of the magnificent business edifice of this great country and if the foundation (confidence) is removed it must fall with a great crash. And the populists are denominated 'cranks,' and a large and interesting variety of choice epithets is applied to them because they want to replace this airy foundation with cash."—The Representative.

CONGRESSMAN BYNUM has a plan for enlarging the national bank circulation which would perhaps strike the mass of the people more favorably than Senator Farwell's. It is to allow them to deposit state and municipal bonds as well as government bonds to secure their issues, This would give the circulation an elasticity which it could not have if based upon a fixed quantity of government bonds, and it would create a market for state and municipal bonds which would be of advantage to many communities. Mr. Bynum was formerly a strong advocate of free silver coinage but has now abandoned it and suggests this plan to obtain "more money."—News,

The recent election of Miss Emily Louise Gerry, of this city, as regent of the Society of the Daughters of the Revolution, makes an interesting point of connection between the present and the past in American history. Miss Gerry's father, Elbridge Gerry, was a signer of the declaration of independence, a member of the committee which framed the constitution of the United States and vice president of the United States in Madison's administration. He was born 150 years ago a subject of King George II. and his daughter at the age of ninety-two years is a citizen of what is now the oldest republic on the face of the earth. She is the last living child of a signer of the declaration of Independence.—New Haven (Conn.) Daily News.

COUNTY DIVISION.

The last weeks issue of the Red Lake Falls Gazette gives the new county division scheme in detail. Petitions are now being circulated asking that at the next general election the question of dividing Polk county into four parts be submitted to the people. Under the new order of things this part of the county will be in Red Lake county with the county seat of course, at Red Lake Falls. The proposed county would comprise the following towns;—Numedal, Norden, Bray, Rorgsbury, Black River, Wyandotte, Red Lake Falls, Emardville, Lake Pleasant. North Poplar River' Sanders, Polk Center, River Falls, Louisville, Gervais, Gentilly and Terrebonne. If the proposition carries at the election the first board of county commissioners will be John B. Hebert, of Poplar River, O. Neel, of Louisville, Michael Jeffers, of Gervais, Swan Anderson, of Black River and L. A. Kaufer, of Red Lake Falls.

East Grand Forks joins and asks that theirs be named Nash county with the following towns:—Bygland, Huntsville, Grand Forks, Sullivan, Euclid, Higdem Sandsville, Farley. Bristlet, Fisher, Nesbit, Rhinehart, Keystone, Belgium, Northland, Tabor, Angus, two unorganized townships.

McIntosh aspires to be the county seat of a county which they propose to call Columbia with the following towns—Lambert, Tilden, Badger, Hill River. Woodside, King, Eden, Garfield, Winger, Rosebud, Chester, Grove Park, Lessor, Godfrey, Knute, Brandsvold, Queen Garden, Sletten, Columbia.

Crookston, not being in the deal, is left with the remanent, the smallest county of the four. It would comprise the following towns:—Fanny, Tynsid, Andover, Fairfax, Vineland, Russia. Hubbard. Liberty, Lowell, Roome, Crookston, Kertsonville, Hammond, Onstad and Reis.

If the proposition carries it, of course, means four set of county officers to support four set of county buildings and public records to prepare. It will come at a time when the tax payers are poorley prepared to stand the expense, and about the only benifits in sight are the prespective county seat booms. So far as we know this section will oppose the scheme to a man.

A man named Carl Johnson, one of the shovelers on the gravel train was badly injured in the yard about noon today. He was standing on one of the loaded gravel cars when the train suddenly backed up and he lost his balance and fell down in front of the car. The wheels passed over one of his arms badly crushing the bone and making amputation necessary. He was also injured about the head but not seriously. After the accident he was taken to his home in Sampson's addition and Dr. Dampier summoned to attend him.—Crookston Times.

This afternoon Johnnie, the seven old son of Nels Swenson, was drowned in the river near the railroad bridge. He and two other little boys, both under six years of age, unknown to their parents went in swimming, and in a short time two of them returned with the clothes of the Swenson boy and reported that he was drowned. Some of the residents at once went to the river and found the body a short distance from the shore. An effort was made to revive him but life had departed. The boy's father is at present on a farm near St. Hilaire and the mother was absent from home at the time of the drowning. Coroner Wyatt has been notified and has gone to investigate the cause of the drowning.—Crookston, Times.

The bondholders and gold gamblers forced upon the country the Sherman law which, under the management of the Harrison and Cleveland administrations, has practically demonitized silver and brought the country face to face with financial ruin: and now they have the brazen effrontery to assert that the free coinage people are responsible for the present financial distress. Could brazen falsehood go farther? The free coinage men did all they could to oppose the law. They denounced it as a financial absurdity, and pointed to the fact that the government might as well purchase wheat and rye, giving treasury notes therefore as to purchase silver bullion. Free coinage men ask that the government shall cease to be a stock jobber and money gambler and money gambler and go back to its legitimate constitutional business of "coining money." It is not the business of our government to try to fix the commercial price of gold and silver bullion, any more than to try to fix the price of iron ore or wheat. If the government will return to its constitutional duty of "coining money" as it did from its foundation until 1878, business and commerce will take care of themselves as to the price of commodities. Yes, we want the Sherman law repealed mighty soon and the coinage law of Jan. 18th, 1837, re-enacted at one and the same time.—Waseca-Co. Herald.

Hay is reported to be worth $50 a ton in Europe and it is said that this country will be called on for a supply. At that price enough hay goes to waste in Polk County every year to pay off the public debt. Farmers will do well to put up all they can as the southern part of the state has been very dry this year and the prospect for good prices for hay is encouraging.

THEIR FIRST DINNER PARTY.

But They Waited In Vain For the Guests to Come.

They had only been married a month and it was their first dinner party, consequently they were both a little flurried when the time came for the guests to arrive.

She had superintended the arranging of the table herself, and now stood surveying its obviously new silver, glass and linen with housewifely pride.

"Do you really think everything will go well, Edward?" she asked for the twentieth time.

And for the twentieth time he answered: "Of course it will all go well. I only pity the poor fellows who have no little wife and no home of their own."

"Oh, Edward, how nice!" she gurgled, "and how I do pity the poor girls who have no nice, kind husbands. There is Edith. She is such a sweet girl, she really ought to know how nice it is to be married."

"Yes, indeed. And then there is George. He has no idea of what happiness he is missing."

She walked into the parlor, and standing before the mirror rearranged the rose in her hair. "Do you like it so?" she asked.

"It is lovely. Poor George, how he must envy me!"

"And, oh, Edward, I do feel sorry for Edith. Hark, is that a carriage?"

They both fell into easy attitudes of expectancy, but the carriage rolled on. He took out his watch and looked at it. It was just 7.

"Oh, dear," she moaned, "I'm afraid they will not be prompt, and my notes said 7 sharp."

"Perhaps my watch is fast," he said soothingly.

She moved her lace pin a little, then replaced it, regarding herself in the glass with a critical air. He walked up and down with his hands in his pockets.

"Oh, dear," she wailed, "they are late already, and the cook will be so cross. She looks perfectly colossal when she is cross, Edward."

"And the women will have to chatter half an hour in the dressing room after they do come," he groaned.

"Why, Edward, how unkind—as if the men did not like to stay just as long with their horrid cigars!"

"Listen, here they come!"

They fell again into position, but the wheels passed on.

"It is odd," she said, "people never kept mamma waiting in this way. They were always anxious to come to her house."

"Perhaps they have gone there now."

"Why, Edward! But I do wish they would come. I'm afraid the dinner is ruined. I don't dare to go to see. I wonder if I might call down the tube?"

"Of course," was the airy response. "I say this is an awful bore. I envy George. Nobody expects him to give dinner parties."

"And I envy Edith. She has no one to talk unkindly to her."

The clock chimed the half hour.

"You are sure you said 7 sharp?"

"Of course I am. I am not quite an imbecile yet if I have married you."

"Who is talking unkindly now?"

"Oh, I never thought that you would treat me so when you begged me to marry you."

"I only asked you once and you said yes quick enough."

"I never thought you would be a brute."

"And I never thought you would be a virago."

"Nobody will accept my invitations now, just because I have married you—mamma said I was making a mistake."

"People were always glad enough to accept my invitations before I was married."

"Very well, if you want to be free I will go home."

"If you want to go, pray don't allow me to detain you."

The clock chimed out eight strokes, carriages kept rolling by, but none of them stopped. She swept into the bedroom and began opening drawers and boxes and taking out their contents, which she could not see for her tears. He tried to hum "After the Ball," watching her movements furtively through the open door. Would she really leave him? And what would the boys say if she did?

She tumbled the costly things about in a careless fashion. What did their beauty matter now when she was going home with a broken heart to die!

"But why did everybody stay away?" he muttered between his teeth.

"Haven't we a friend in the world?" she asked herself.

Then she gave a cry. Her eye had fallen on a white heap in the corner of a drawer.

"Edward!" she cried in tragic tones, "here are all my invitations now—I had forgotten to mail them!"

They looked at each other a moment—those two who were about to part forever. Then a smile curled the corners of her mouth. In an instant she was clasped in his arms. Then a shrill whistle sounded from the tube, and an offended voice called:

"Would yez be havin any dinner tonight?"

"Oh, Edward!" she whispered, "how shall I ever tell the cook?"—Chicago Tribune.

A Mystery.

A fat man with a brown soft hat walked briskly into a Main street restaurant and took a seat at the lunch counter. The man who was presiding over the section of the counter at which he sat ambled over to him and said, "Well?"

"Well?" repeated the fat man.

"Whatcher want?" asked the waiter.

"Gimme a piece of apple pie and a glass of milk."

"Hain't got any apple pie, sir."

"What kind of pie have you got?"

"Cocoanut pie and lemon pie, sir."

"Gimme a piece of lemon pie."

The waiter went away and returned with a slab of dark brown pastry and a glass of light blue milk. The fat man sawed off a piece of the pie and transferred it to his mouth. A pained look came over his face, but he gulped the pie down and beckoned to the waiter. "What kind of pie is that?" he asked.

"What kind did you order, sir?" asked the waiter.

"Lemon pie."

"Well, sir, that must be lemon pie, then."

"But it ain't lemon pie."

"Ain't lemon pie, sir?"

"No, by a darn sight."

"Are you sure it ain't lemon pie, sir?"

"Of course I'm sure."

"That's funny, sir."

"Nothing funny about it. What kind of pie is it?"

The waiter leaned over the counter and said in a hoarse whisper, "Confidentially, sir, I have tried to work that pie off for apple, pineapple, pieplant, peach and prune, and it didn't go, and if it ain't lemon I'm darned if I know what it is."—Buffalo Express.

A New Hamlet.

The summer girl had finished her schedule for the campaign and sat down to think. She was looking a little like Marius among the ruins when her dearest friend came in.

"What's the matter?" was the quick inquiry.

"I've just completed my want list for the summer," she replied, handing it to her.

"Gracious me," exclaimed the other girl, looking it over, "this ought not to make you sad. Here's gowns and gowns, and bonnets and hats, and jackets and waists, and shoes and slippers, and parasols and fans, and gloves and hundreds of things that are too lovely for any use."

The fair possessor of it all sighed profoundly.

"Yes," she said, "it's all just like the play of 'Hamlet'—with Hamlet left out."

"How do you mean?" and the big eyes opened wonderingly.

"Where's the man?" sighed the first girl again, and there was no answer.—Detroit Free Press.

Two Irish Bulls.

Two prime Irish bulls were recently found among the autograph letters of Sir Philip Francis. This is the first: Some ladies went to the Irish house of commons to hear a particular debate, which happened to be put off till next day. Sir Boyle Roche said: "Indeed, ladies, I am very sorry for your disappointment, but why didn't you come tomorrow?" The second is quite apropos of recent incidents in the imperial parliament. The house being one day remarkably quiet and silent, Sir Boyle got up and said: "Mr. Speaker! I spake to order—an honorable gentleman, who always sits behind me, is perpetually laughing in my face; I move that before he laughs at me any more he will be pleased to tell me what he is laughing at!"—Pall Mall Gazette.

A Natural Supposition.

Detective—And which of your employees do you suspect of taking the money?

Business Man (thoughtfully)—Well, there's the bookkeeper, he has a new suit of clothes every week; the cashier drives a better horse than I can afford; the purchasing agent wears four big diamonds; one of our clerks has a wife who goes in society—so I guess you had better accuse that miserable ragamuffin of a private secretary. Nobody has seen him have anything new in two years, and it's pretty near a certainty that he's playing the races.—Detroit Tribune.

Would Probably Do Just as Well.

"Have you got any Gretna greens?" inquired the facetious customer with the basket on his arm.

A LARGE DROP IN RATES TO THE WEST

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 6th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates, amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First-class from $60.00 to [illegible] to Spokane from $36 to $30; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

Last summer I was attacked with a bad case of flux, and after taking four doses of Beggs' Diarrhoea Balsam was immediately relieved and cured. MAILED TWELVE YEARS AGO.

A Postal Card Which Reached Its Foreign Destination After a Long Delay.

A postal card which has been to Europe and come back has just been turned in at the postoffice department in Washington, to give the officials there a chance of discovering who is responsible for its long delay in transmission. It was mailed in Washington late in December, 1881, addressed to a bookseller in London, directing him to send to the writer a large number of books which were even then sufficiently rare not to be readily accessible in this country. The card reached its destination late in May, 1892. The bookseller, apparently without noticing the disparity between the date written on the card and the date of receipt, filled the order, after taking time to hunt up the books, which, in the course of ten years' interval, had grown still rarer. The surprise of the author of the card may be imagined when, so long after having concluded that the dealer could not fill his order, he suddenly had this large supply of literature dumped upon him from the postoffice. When he charged the dealer with neglect, the date of the card appears to have been examined for the first time; but it was pleaded that a dealer would be justified in filling such an order in spite of the antiquity of the written date, because he would have a right to assume that his customer had himself been careless about dating the card, a slip of the pen making 1891 read 1881. The New York Evening Post thinks that the card must have got into the old postoffice in Washington, been postmarked and then lost, slipping possibly into one of the many cracks and crannies of that office. When the office was moved from its old and shabby quarters into the building it now occupies some one doubtless came across the card, and, not noticing its date, dropped it into a mail bag bound for London. The responsibility for the accident is obviously past fixing, and the bookseller in London and his customer in America will have to settle their dispute without the assistance of the postoffice department.

Too Trivial.

Judge Chase of Vermont was a man of excellent sense, and a great stickler for the dignity of courts.

At one time a case of very trifling importance, which had well-nigh run the gauntlet of adjudication, came before the highest court in the state. The counsel for the plaintiff was opening with the usual apologies for a frivolous suit, when the subject matter, "to wit, one turkey, of great value," caught the ear of the judge.

"Mr. Clerk," he called out, in an irate tone, "strike that case from the docket. The supreme court of the State of Vermont does not sit here to determine the ownership of a turkey!"

Pushing Trade.

It is not alone in America that barbers show extraordinary persistence and ingenuity in pressing their wares upon customers. An American who has been traveling in France relates that in Paris the barber who was shaving him stepped two or three times upon the side of his foot.

At last the customer called out:

"Please don't do that any more! I have a corn."

"Exactly what I was trying to find out, monsieur," said the barber, blandly. "We have an excellent preparation for removing corns, for sale at one franc per bottle!"

His Object.

Bingo—Well, old man, I'll say good-by now. I'm off for the world's fair to-morrow. Going to take all my family with me.

Kingly—Why, I thought you said you weren't going.

Bingo—I wasn't. But I understand there is a place there where you can check your children, and I want to see if I can't get a little rest.

NOTHING FITS your case, if you're an overworked or "run-down" woman, like Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In any condition of the female system, that will build up, strengthen, regulate, and cure.

Every mother needs it. It lessens the pains and burdens of child-bearing, insures healthy, vigorous offspring, and promotes an abundant secretion of nourishment on the part of the mother.

Steel Buttons.

The prejudices in favor of nobility are very strong in Italy, and though family connections are prized so highly there, no man seems ashamed if he has no family to boast. In "Glimpses of Italian Society" the author says that she was astonished to hear a well-bred clergyman say gravely to a friend, also a man eminent for talents and fortune:

"Yes, there is a grand invitation at such a place to-night, but I don't go because I am not a gentleman; and the master desired I would let you know that it was for no other reason that you had not a card, too, my good friend, for it is an invitation for none but people of fashion, you see."

At all this no one stares, no one laughs; and it is accepted as the proper thing.

A woman of quality, near whom I sat at the fine ball Bragadin made in honor of the season, inquired how I passed the morning. I named several churches I had looked into, particularly that which they esteem beyond the rest as a favorite work of Palladio, and called the Redentore.

"You do very right," said she, "to look at our churches, as you have none in England, I know; but then you have so many other fine things, such charming steel buttons, for example," pressing my hand to show that she meant no offense.

Not So Fast.

The New York Tribune reports an anecdote told by a Washington gentleman concerning a city, historically famous, which need not been named here. It has "fallen behind the procession," as the current phrase is, and it is by no means increasing rapidly in population. Said the Washington man to the reporter:

I went over to —— one evening to make a call. It was dark and I couldn't see the numbers on the houses. After a time I noticed a middle-aged man smoking a pipe on the front steps of a house a few doors away.

"I beg pardon," said I, "but will you kindly tell me which way the numbers run on this street?"

He took the pipe out of his mouth, slowly knocked out the ashes, and said:

"Just got to town?"

"Well, yes," I answered, taken by surprise.

"Evenin' boat?"

"Yes."

"What number yer lookin' for?"

"Forty-nine."

"It's the other side, four doors below."

I thanked him and turned to go.

"Hold on a minute," he called. "What did you say about numbers runnin'?"

"Well, they don't run," he rejoined; "they don't even walk. There haint nothin' run in this town sence the war!"

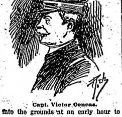
PATROITSIM AT THE FAIR.

IMPRESSING CEREMONIES AT THE RAISING OF PAUL JONES' FLAG.

The Fourth Was a Gala Day at the Exposition and was Celebrated in Loyal Style—The Reception of the Spanish Caravels.

Jackson Park, July 9.—This has been in many respects the most important week of the great Columbian jubilee. It was the week of the Fourth of July and of the reception of the Columbian caravels, the one commemorative of the most important event in American history, and the other commemorative of the most important discovery in the world's history. Both events were celebrated with becoming and fitting ceremony and eclat. The Fourth of July celebration during the day was a comparatively quiet one on the fair grounds because the use of firecrackers and other instruments of torture to the human ear were forbidden to be used on the grounds, and people crowded into the grounds at an early hour to escape the final racket and fusilade of the small boys' firecrackers in the streets of Chicago. No such crowd of people ever gathered upon the grounds before since the gates were opened to the public on May 1. The ceremonies were very appropriate to the occasion. The most impressive scene and at the same time the one which most stirred the blood of a patriot was that furnished by the raising of Paul Jones' old flag by the wife of the grand son of Lieut. Safford, who rescued the flag from the sea after it had been shot from the staff in the fight between the Serapis and the Bon Homme. It was the first American flag to be raised aloft as the emblem of the United country, and Paul Jones, the old Scotch private, who carried the war right on in English waters, was pre-eminently the right man to have first raised this flag. The old flag has only twelve stars for all that time, only twelve of the states had joined the Union, and Georgia was yet not one of them. The tremendous cheering, the salvos of artillery, the general unfurling of flags and the grand chorus of two thousand voices which greeted this great relic of the past and emblem of daring presented an incident to the eye and ear, perhaps the most impressive that has ever occurred of the kind in the world's history. The grounds presented an appearance which probably no scene ever before presented in its variety of many colored costumes, embracing the many styles of all nations; in thousands of flags of all nations and in the other gay bunting and decorations displayed everywhere. The whole celebration must have given the foreigners here an excellent idea of the patriotism and loyalty of the American people in such a way as to make the descendants of kings and princes just a little envious over the fact that republics can retain the respect of the people and their unswerving fealty to such an eminent degree. Of course, the great spectacular feature of the day was the great fireworks display in the evening, which cost the management of the exposition some $10,000, and which brought enormous crowds upon the grounds. It was the finest display which has ever been seen in Chicago. The works were shot off upon the lake shore south of the great battleship Illinois, and opened with the sending up of a balloon carrying streamers of fire representatives of the American flag.



Capt. Victor Concas.

The appearance of this beautiful representation of the national flag was received with a perfect storm of toots and whistles from boats on the lake. No sooner did the colors of the starry banner burn away than a number of bombs were let off from the shore. These made a tremendous racket, and on bursting high in the air kicked up another horrible din, but did not fling a shower of colored stars into the sky. After twenty-one of these noisy bombs had sounded the national salute a number of rockets were shot into the heavens. The display of fireworks that followed surpassed the splendid exhibition given on dedication night. After the heavens had been bombarded for several minutes with a fierce fire of shells and rockets that burst into thousands of emeralds, turquoise, rubies and showers of gold and silver, the portrait of George Washington was fired. Beneath the picture blazed the words in letters of colored fire: "First in war; first in piece; first in the hearts of his countrymen."

A school of fire fish intermixed with sundry serpents began to dart about over the waters, some of the bigger and more daring of the snakes swimming out to the vessels anchored nearest in shore, only to dive suddenly and disappear beneath the waves. This display of fireworks in the water ended with a gorgeous fountain that rose out of the center of the lake. Three tiers of shelves dashed golden spray. In addition there was a fourth fountain that revolved and showered its blazing jewels. On every side swarms of fire flies sprang into existence right over the ruins of the golden fountain. These harmless insects were scattered by a torrent of prismatic rain.

The second device showed the red and yellow royal coat of arms of Spain, with the date "1492" below. Simultaneously the red, white and blue colors of the United States of arms appeared with the Columbian date "1893."

Fire Sprouting From the Lake.

A novel spectacle was afforded when, without any warning, a huge mass of water was thrown into the air, as if upheaved by some submarine earthquake. The silver that fell in showers to the surface was mixed with glistening particles of golden fire. Magnetism rockets, aquatic fireworks and several more pretty set designs held the constant gaze of the crowds for an hour.

The biggest and most attractive exhibition of fireworks ever given in Chicago closed in a fitting manner with a Columbian bouquet of rockets. In this final piece were 2,500 bursting rockets, which filled the air with a rainbow of more than 100,000 glittering stars.

To most, however, by far the most impressive scenes were furnished by the elbowing, pushing and crowding of a mighty throng of people numbering 350,000 souls. One of the grandest spectacles ever looked upon faced the speaker's stand in front of the administration building when the exercises of the day were being held. It was a solid mass of humanity, filling the whole square. The inconveniences of a crowd were manifest, however, when all this mass of humanity attempted to get up town after the exercises were over. There was some horrible crowding and inconvenience, and it took all the transportation facilities in the city available here to get them to their destination before 2 o'clock in the morning, although the show was practically over at 10 p. m.

The ceremonies or reception to the officers of the Columbian caravels were certainly worthy of the event they commemorated. The Andy Johnson and the Michigan, the two representative vessels of the United States government in this harbor, saluted them upon their arrival with salvos of artillery, and an elaborate programme of speeches and music was arranged for their reception by the authorities of the exposition. Gen. Miles and his staff with the companies of United States soldiers contained here represented the United States army, while Secretary Herbert represented the national navy. Senator Sherman read the speech of the day from manuscript in such a feeble voice that the crowds could scarcely hear him, but a few feet away from the platform. It reminded one forcibly that the grand characters which the civil war brought onto the stage of life will soon pass away, to be succeeded in many instances by a lot of pot house politicians which the present administration appears to be bringing prominently to the front. These caravels are now located in the slip close to the convent of La Rabida where are exhibited all the great relics of Columbus. They impress the beholder as being very staunch craft, indeed, capable of weathering almost any ordinary gale of the Atlantic and which, even to-day, would gladden the heart of a New England whaler if he could be allowed to rig them to suit himself after the modern style. The wonderful nerve of the great navigator was displayed not so much of venturing into the ships which were safe, but in boldly pointing their prows toward an unknown coast and over seas fraught with all the tenors of superstition.

—Ralph McKenzie.

New Block Signal System.

A new method of block signaling has been invented, the main feature of which consists in the employment of electric lamps placed along the tracks, about on a line with the eye of the engineer, usually about 300 feet apart. The lamps are normally lighted, which condition indicates safety and a clear track, and the extinction of the lamp gives the signal to stop. While this system is applicable to any part of the railroad system, the automatic device is especially adapted for the equipment of quick moving trains through tunnels, under conditions of absolute safety. This system not only doubles the capacity of the tunnel and provides for the control of trains anywhere in it, but gives the engineer, conductor and trainmen a signal that is always in sight for the movement of the train. Under the present system of blocking, with one signal at the ends of the block sections an engineer is liable to overlook or mistake the signal, especially when smoke or fog is thick, and there is no way provided to stop the train after it crosses the home signal; but, with the new system, the signal to stop can be given at any time by the operator cutting off the current upon the lamps. The operator is seated in a signal tower, through which the electric light circuits are passed, and from whence he can tell at a glance the whereabouts of a train in a tunnel.

Toothsome Giraffe Meat.

Judging by the details of the edible value of the giraffe, given by a writer in the London Standard, it would pay some enterprising and, if such a phenomenal creature exists, rich farmer to start a farm of giraffes in England.

Giraffe meat is said to be excellent, second, indeed, to only two or three game animals in Africa. It is not unlike veal, with a game flavor, but there is a slight aromatic taste. The meat of a fat young cow giraffe is delicious, and comparable to almost any game flesh in the world. The tongue—from eighteen to twenty-one inches in length—is a real delicacy, and as to the marrow bones of a giraffe, there is no other luxury in Africa comparable to them. The milk of the giraffe, it is also said, is rich and well flavored.

A BLUNDERING FATHER.

But He Won't Try to Make Himself Useful Again Without Inquiring.

The neighbors are telling a good joke of a certain husband near Battersea Park, and, whether true or not, it is good enough to publish. He is a bold, bad traveling man by profession and is off on the road many months in the year, so that he gets little chance to be in the bosom of his family. Being a loving husband and the father of five very interesting children, it is only natural that he should long for a chance to have a frolic with them.

Now, as the story goes, he happened to strike town very unexpectedly on a recent afternoon, and immediately started for home to give his family a surprise. Much to the disappointment he found his wife and children were out. This was very discouraging, and, in order to keep up his spirits, he got out his old brier and stood at the front door for a smoke.

Imagine, then, his pleasure upon beholding his two youngest children playing in front of the house next door. He called the little ones to him, and was wondering what he could do to amuse them, when it occurred to him that his wife was in the habit of giving them a bath about this time every evening and putting them to bed.

It also occurred to him that it would be a good plan for him to take time by the forelock and give the children their bath, thus relieving his wife and giving her a chance to visit with him on her return. A short time later he had the babies up in the nursery and, in spite of their protestations, removed their garments and gave them as good a washing as a child ever had. He was giving them the third coat of lather and having a high old time with the struggling darlings, when his wife came into the room and nearly had a fit.

"Why, Charlie," she exclaimed, delightedly, "when did you come?"

"This afternoon," he replied, as he released her from his grasp, and gazed proudly upon his work.

"But what does this mean?" she asked, pointing to the shivering youngsters.

"Why," he replied, "you always give them a bath in the evenings and—I thought I would relieve you of the bother for once, that's all."

During the next few moments she could not speak for laughing, but when she finally came round she turned to her bewildered husband with the startling announcement—

"These are not our children, Charley; they belong to the people next door!"

It is safe to say that when Charley again tackles washing the babies he will get some one to identify them.—Yankee Blade.

ATTRACTION OF THE ABYSS.

Why People Long to Throw Themselves From High Places.

Chevreul's well known experiments with the exploratory pendulum and the divining rod show that if we represent to ourselves a motion in any direction the hand will unconsciously realize it and communicate it to the pendulum, says a writer in the Popular Science Monthly. The tipping table realizes a movement we are anticipating through the intervention of a real movement of the hands, of which we are not conscious. Mind reading, by those who divine by taking your hand where you have hidden anything, is a reading of imperceptible motions by which your thought is translated without your being conscious of them. In case of fascination and vertigo, which are more visible among children than among adults, a movement is begun, the suspension of which is prevented by a paralysis of the will, and it carries us to suffering and death. When a child I was navigating a plank on the river without a thought that I might fall. All at once the idea came like a diverging force, projecting itself across the rectilinear thought which had alone previously directed my action. It was as if an invisible arm seized me and drew me down. I cried out and continued staggering over the whirling waters till help came to me. The mere thought of vertigo provoked it. The board lying on the ground suggests no thought of a fall when you walk over it; but when it is over a precipice and the eye takes the measure of the distance to the bottom, the representation of a falling motion becomes intense, and the impulse to fall correspondingly so. Even if you are safe, there may still be what is called the attraction of the abyss. The vision of the gulf as a fixed idea, having produced an "inhibition" on all your ideas or forces, nothing is left but the figure of the great hole, with the intoxication of the rapid movement that begins in your brain and tends to turn the scales of the mental balance. Temptation, which is continual in children because everything is new to them, is nothing else than the force of an idea and the motive impulse that it accompanies it.

HOW TO EAT.

Not One Woman in a Hundred Can Do It Gracefully.

"I have no appetite whatever this morning," remarked the large woman across the boarding house breakfast table. At the same time she put half a roll, a large bite of steak and a quantity of potato into her mouth. When they were all well inside—"But, then, I never do—it's real distressing," and she proceeded to swallow her coffee with gusto.

The timid-eyed little woman who was mincing her egg and oatmeal suddenly put down her spoon. The woman without an appetite had at last been too much for her, just as she had long feared would some day be the case.

"I could stand her everlasting regrets about eating so little if she wouldn't talk with her mouth full," she whispered to Miss Briggs, as they mounted the stairs together. Miss Briggs was a typewriter, but her pretty lips never met in anything but graceful curves during her entire meal.

"There are not many women who know how to eat," she answered. "Wasn't it Lord Byron who said something about not wanting to see a pretty girl eat? I lunch in a big, crowded restaurant, and, looking round it, I rarely see a single face that isn't out of shape, with the mouths wandering all over the place. And such bites as the women take! And how fast they eat! It's what I was taught to call 'bolting' my food. And then they will talk with their mouths full. The words come out as rapidly as all that food will permit.

"I think that every child should be taught how to eat before a looking glass, and then she can see for herself what a painful spectacle she makes of the perfectly natural process of chewing and swallowing. As it is, not one person in one hundred knows how to eat."—New York World.

BE FRUITFUL AND MULTIPLY.

A Biblical Injunction Which Has Been Observed in Many Cases.

The palm for multiple child bearing is awarded by the St. Louis Republic to Mrs. Elsworth Miller of Cold Springs, N. Y., who has been married less than ten years, but who, within that short space of time, has become the mother of seventeen children. The last edition to this was a set of triplets, born on March 12 of this year. Mrs. Miller was married on Oct. 10, 1883, and since that time has given birth to this numerous family, which are divided as follows: Three sets of triplets, nine; three sets of twins, six, and two singles, two. Mrs. Miller is not yet thirty-one years of age. In searching the annals of the world for material that will attest the appropriateness and peculiar fitness of the above title, it is found that Mme. de la Riva of Florence, Italy, gave birth to eight children on Sept. 9, 1507. Mme. Frescobaldi, another Florentine lady, who died in 1570, was the mother of fifty-two children, no fewer than three being born at any one time, four and five at a single birth being nothing unusual with the madame, and at one time six. In Aubray's "Natural History of Wiltshire" (England) there is an account of the Boham family, Thomas and Edith. Edith had twins and triplets on numerous occasions, and finally astonished all Wiltshire by giving birth to seven children at one time. "There is a tradition," to quote from Aubrey, which is recorded in the parish register, that all the seven children were brought together to the font of the church and there baptized." The Gentleman's Magazine for March 17, 1798, is authority for the statement that the wife of Pierre Dubsain of Verchoq, department of Pas-de-Calais, France, was the mother of six children, three boys and three girls, all of whom were born at a single birth. "A lady" (name not given—see "Statistician" for 1880, page 503), at Xenia, Ohio, in the year 1850 gave birth to five children at one time. Mrs. James McElmore, who lived at Texarkana, Ark., in the year 1888 had become the mother of a family of nine children, all within the short space of three years, the last arrival being a trio of girls. Mrs. Phoebe Lynch, who was living at Seymour, Ind., in the same year (1888) had seven children at two births, eighteen months apart. The last four, two boys and two girls, were born on April 30, 1888.

THE SHY MAN.

If He Still Blushes He Is Not Without His Advantages.

One of the characters in a modern novel is made to say: "I love a shy man. He is getting so scarce."

Perhaps that is why he is so really delicious.

When he blushes palpably, but without looking awkward, one is drawn toward him by a certain sentiment of affinity, and so long as he is just shy enough, but not too shy, he wins more and more upon one.

To draw a really shy man out of his shyness is a pleasing task, and the more so he is generally enchanted to give expression to the thoughts and ideas that he usually keeps locked fast away within himself. One comes upon a stray jewel or two now and then in such cases in the shape of an unexpected thought that astonishes the discoverer because it seems so different from the person from whom it emanates.

I assure you I would think shy men are sometimes very charming, but then one must be a little bit shy one's self in order to appreciate them.

Do you know any nice ones, and do you know that they only come out of their shell in a tete-a-tete, and not always then, so that there is a pleasing element of uncertainty about them which adds to the interest they inspire?—London Truth.

OUTCOME OF A PLOT

THE SINKING OF THE BRITISH WARSHIP VICTORIA.

Irish Revolutionists Claim That the Recent Disaster Was the Result of a Plot of Which They Were the Authors.

New York, July 24.—A new and startling theory has been advanced as the cause of the sinking of the British battleship Victoria by the Camperdown. Irish revolutionists claim that the sinking of the war vessel was the result not of accident, but of a deep laid plot which has for its object the destruction, if possible, of the British navy and the infliction of dire injury on England in every quarter of the globe where her flag flies. A circular, a copy of which a morning paper succeeded in obtaining, and which has been promulgated in Irish Nationalist circles, claims for the revolutionists the honor of striking such a heavy blow to England. Referring to Admiral Tryon's manouver, the circular, which bears date July 10, says:

"Admiral Tryon is not guilty of the loss of the Victoria. He is a victim of the sins of his country. The manouver which he purposed the fleet should perform, would have been successfully carried out had our brave brother's in England's service not been equal to the opportunity afforded them and given themselves a willing sacrifice for the cause of Ireland. The spirit of Emmett still lives and the fight must be carried on until England hauls down her flag in Ireland. We have sworn brothers now on almost every English war ship. We have them in the English regiments at home and abroad, and wherever the english flag floats."

STILL OUT.

Sheboygan, Wis., July 24.—The employes of the Mattoon Manufacturing company here are still out on a strike, and there seems to be little probability of a settlement being reached at the present time. A meeting of strikers was held last night at Born's Park and many uninterested parties attended. Speeches were made but no violent language was used. When the small force of men at the factory went to work this morning they were met at the gate by a crowd of strikers and prevented from entering the building. The officers of the company have taken no action as yet, but it is probable that the works will be closed down to-night. The company employes 1,000 men.

A CLOSING CHAPTER.

Janesville, Wis., July 24.—One of the closing chapters in the famous murder complication was enacted last night when death came to Daniel Stone, the wealthy blind farmer, which event occurred at his home in the town of Fulton. Stone was worth over $100,000 and has been totally blind for many years. Some time ago he was called from his home one dark night and pounded with a club by some persons unknown. Later his wife was murdered, and for the latter crime his nephew, Matthew R. Ashton, was arrested and is now on trial. Dropsy and old age caused Stone's death.

NARROW ESCAPE.

Boston, July 24.—The passengers on board the Guion line steamer Arizona, Captain Brooks, from New York, which arrived at Queenstown at 4:35 p. m. today, report that that vessel had a very narrow escape from a collision with an unknown Red Star line steamer during a thick fog on the 17th inst. The latter steamer crossed the Arizona's bows not fifty yards distant. The termination of the anxious tension during the peril was marked by loud cheers by the passengers on both vessels when they had cleared each other.

RIVER IMPROVEMENT.

Washington, July 24.—The acting secretary of war has approved allotments made by the Missouri river commission for the improvement of the river to the extent of $700,000. The sum will be expended as follows: Expenses of the commission, $20,000; surveys, gauges, etc., $25,000; operating snag boats, $35,000; repairing revetment near Council Bluffs, $15,000; repairs near Belmont Bend, $30,000; systematic improvement of first reach, $585,000.

HORSES BURNED.

Rockaway Beach, N. Y., July 24.—A disastrous fire ravaged a small section of the beach to-day. The large ice factory of Jameson & Bond, their coal and wood yard, stables and the residence of John A. Bond were totally destroyed. Eleven horses were burned. The school house and church were saved by heroic afforts of the firemen, the steamers doing execution. The ice factory and plant cost $22,000, and the total loss is about $30,000, with very little insurance.

HE WAS JEALOUS.

Kansas City, July 24.—The third murder in Kansas City, Kan., within the last ten days was committed this morning, when Charles Blunk shot and almost instantly killed William Blackford. The killing to-day was the result of Blackford paying too much attention to Blunk's wife. Blunk is a saloonkeeper and Blackford had been employed by him as a barkeeper for the last six months.

JOE JEFFERSON DYING.

New York, July 24.—Joseph Jefferson, the veteran actor, is near death's door. A cancerous affection of the neck is the principal ailment. Mr. Jefferson's physicians have so far been badly baffled by the disease, which is attributed to an inherited tendency and partly to carelessness in the treatment of a boil some months ago.

HURT IN A RUNAWAY.

Wahpeton, N. D., July 24.—Hon. Gustav Schuler, a prominent lawyer and business man of this city, was terribly injured in a runaway, being thrown from a buggy from a buggy and striking on his chest. Hemorrhages of the lungs have continued for several hours.

COMPLETE SUCCESS.

New York, July 24.—The official government trial of the engines of the big armored cruiser Maine ended at the Brooklyn navy yard and was a complete success.

THIS MEANS A FIGHT.

Paris, July 24.—It was stated at midnight last night that Siam's reply to France's ultimatum is considered unsatisfactory. M. Pavie will probably leave Bangkok on Wednesday to go aboard the cruiser Forfait. The refusal of M. Develle, French minister of foreign affairs, to give Siam an extension of time for her reply to the ultimatum is ascribed to his desire to force Siam's hand and prevent her negotiating for British support. It is stated that M. Develle has notified Admiral Hunan to proceed at once to declare the blockade.

London, July 24.—The Bangkok correspondent of the Daily Chronicle telegraphs under yesterday's date: "The Siamese warships which are anchored one mile from the French are crowded with men ready for action. Their intention is, in case the French commence hostilities, to steam down and ram the French gunboats, attempt to board them in force and attack the crews with fixed bayonets.

FREE-FOR-ALL FIGHT.

Scranton, Pa., July 24.—Saturday was pay day at Priceburg, a prosperous borough of this county, and the Huns and Poles began to drink heavily. At 7 o'clock in the evening a Hun and a Pole became engaged in a fight in a saloon and their countrymen took sides with them, a free fight resulting. The police arrested four Huns and lodged them in jail. At 9 o'clock the Hungarians held an indignation meeting and then proceeded in a body to the jail, where they overpowered the keeper and liberated the prisoners. This caused the largest riot that has occurred in this region in sixteen years. The Pole took exception and a race war commenced, lasting three hours, during which time there was a reign of terror, all saloons in the town being taken possession of and the officers driven off. Over thirty men were injured, three fatally, and one Pole had his ears cut off. Many windows were broken in with stones and clubs. Shortly before midnight Deputy Sheriff Craig arrested several and restored peace. Many arrests will follow.

SIAMESE KILLED.

Paris, July 24.—A telegram from Stungtreng announces that Capt. Villers, commanding the French forces at Khong, reopened fire upon the Siamese on the morning of the 10th inst. In the course of the battle the French captured Forts Dondun, Dongo and Donhan, thus confining the enemy to Fort Donsom. The last named stronghold, though protected by a series of well constructed fortifications, was captured on the following day without loss to the French, who now occupy the entire group of islands. Only one town of Khong remains to be captured. It is estimated that 300 Siamese were killed and 200 were wounded in the last encounters.

CRUSHED TO DEATH.

New York, July 24.—While contractors were blasting rock at the corner of One Hundred and Twenty-second street and Fourth avenue an explosion sent a huge mass of rock, weighing about two tons, crashing through the side wall of 61 East One Hundred and Twenty-second street, killing two people and seriously injuring three, who will probably die. The dead are Marie Posey, thirty-five years old; Marie Adele Posey, five years old, her daughter. The injured are Reginald Posey, eight years old; Mamie McAdam, twenty; Irma O. Posey, thirteen.

DEATH BY DROWNING.

St. Louis, Mo., July 24.—Advices received here by the family of his wife tell of the death by drowning of Lieut. Powhatton Clark, U. S. A., at Fort Custer, Mont., where he was stationed with his command. The circumstances are not known. Lieut. Clark was thirty years of age, a son of Dr. Clark of Baltimore, Md., and was married here to Miss Elsie Clemens about a year ago.

COMPLETELY DESTROYED.

Hagerstown, Md., July 24.—Fire broke out in the stables of Jones & South. Their wholesale house was completely destroyed, together with the adjoining houses of John Emmert and Dr. J. S. Wishard. The total loss is about $125,000, of which Jones & Smith lost $100,000.

TOOK LAUDANUM.

Augusta, Ga., July 24.—C. L. Lancaster, a photographer, committed suicide last night by taking laudanum. He had been drinking heavily for several weeks. He wrote his wife in Waynesboro saying that he would kill himself if she did not return. This is supposed to have been the cause.

SUNDAY CLOSING.

Chicago, July 24.—The world's fair was closed yesterday. The whole aspect of the White City was one of peaceful quiet. The denizens of the Midway Plaizance sat around and told stories of their far-away homes and slept and rested and had a good time among themselves generally.

MURDER AT A FESTIVAL.

Franklin, Ind., July 24.—The colored Baptist church here had a festival last night. All went well until nearly midnight when Horace Nichols became involved in an altercation with two brothers named Curley. Words led to blows and pistols. A dozen shots were fired. Nichols ran when three of the Curleys poured three shots into him. Nichols is dying.

LOST OR ABDUCTED

MYSTERIOUS DISAPPEARANCE OF A LITTLE GIRL.

She Becomes Lost From Her Parents While in the Woods, and Is Supposed to Have Been Kidnaped by an Indian.

Hayward, Wis., July 22.—On Tuesday of this week a family named Johnson, consisting of parents and two small children, were camping out in the vicinity of Spooner, Washburn county, Wis., gathering blueberries. Toward evening the youngest child, a daughter about two and one-half years old, was missing. The parents at once set about in search, and, although the child was but a very few minutes missing, their search was unavailing. Notice was promptly sent to the village of Spooner, and citizens turned out en masse and began the search. Parties were promptly organized and forming a line in which men walked abreast about twelve feet apart, they scoured the woods and brush thoroughly in every direction, through swamps and sloughs, all Tuesday night. Wednesday morning the marshal organized a party and resumed the search, which has been kept up night and day since, but without avail. The parents are overwhelmed with grief. Their anguish is ten-fold augmented by the current rumor that the child had been stolen by the Indians who were berrying in that vicinity, one of whom is reported as saying that if he was paid $50 he could find the little one. This demand for ransom thoroughly aroused the people, and vengeance is threatened the guilty party if apprehended unless the child is given up. There has for some time been some ill feeling existing between the father of the child and a certain Indian in the neighborhood, and threats have been made against him. This fact gives credence to the theory of abduction.

ENDED THE TROUBLE.

Metropolis, Ill., July 22.—The most shocking double murder and suicide that ever occurred in this section took place last evening when Richard Shoemaker killed Richard Lukens, Jr., and George Lukens and seriously wounding their father and then suicided by sending a bullet into his own body. All the parties were men of high social standing in this city, and were well known throughout Southern Illinois and in Kentucky. Richard Lukens, Jr., married Shoemaker's stepdaughter, Miss Lillian Jones, some three years ago. Shoemaker was Miss Jones' guardian, and upon her marriage he was called on for an accounting. Seemingly he had run through with a large sum left her by her father. Suits were brought in the courts and bitter feeling resulted. Last evening Shoemaker, armed with two large revolvers, walked up to Richard Lukens' gate, and finding the two young men standing in the yard, opened fire, shooting George in the right temple and then sending a bullet through Richard's heart as he was holding his babe in his arms. Lukens, Sr., hearing the firing, ran to the scene of the trouble, only to be met by the murderer, who opened fire on him, shooting him in the thigh. Shoemaker ran a couple of squares, and then sitting down sent a bullet into the abdomen and was dead in a few moments.

ASSAULTED AND MURDERED.

Dallas, Tex., July 22.—Miss Frankie Jehnke, sixteen years of age, was assaulted, murdered and her body thrown into a creek near Ennis Wednesday night. Suspicion was directed towards Edward House, a negro employed on the same farm. House became alarmed and fled. Hounds were on his trail yesterday by noon and in a few hours he was run down and captured in the woods. A mob of several hundred men gathered to lynch him, but officers succeeded in getting the negro away on a train, and the supposition is they will place him in some Western jail for safe keeping, and thereby avoid another cremation.

A GIRL ASSAULTED.

Huntington, W. Va., July 22.—Thomas Holley, thirty years of age, met Miss Americus Messenger on the Ohio River railroad track near Cox's landing last evening and committed a criminal assault. A constable named Bowen hearing her cries, ran to her, when Holley jumped into a skiff and went to the Ohio side of the river. He was pursued by the officer and shot in the head before caught. He was jailed here at 1 o'clock this morning. The crowd that collected about the scene of the crime wanted to lynch Holley. Miss Messenger is but fourteen years of age.

SANK IN LAKE SUPERIOR.

Duluth, July 22.—W. R. Gregg of St. Paul, a brother-in-law of F. E. Krayenbuhl of Duluth, was drowned in Lake Superior during last night. With J. G. Clark, a Duluth stock broker, he had started to go across the end of the lake in a row boat in which was rigged a mast and sail. The wind being stormy they unshipped the mast and soon after the boat was swamped and the men thrown out. Gregg was paralyzed by the ice-cold water of Lake Superior and sank almost immediately, while Clark managed to hang on to the boat.

FRANCE SHUT OUT.

Saigon, July 22.—The land telegraph wires between this city and Bangkok have been cut by the Siamese. It will cause some delay in the transmission of dispatches to the French war ships at Bangkok, as all messages will have to be sent via Singapore, Madras, Calcutta and thence through Burmah and down the Bay of Bengal, and so on over the line that extends northeasterly from Bangkok to Elephant Point.

WHISKY FIRM FAILS.

Frankfort, Ky., July 22.—E. H. Taylor, Jr., & Sons made an assignment this morning for the benefit of creditors. It is one of the oldest whisky firms in the country, and manufactured the "Old Taylor" whisky. The assignment was caused by the tightness of the money market, as the assets are said to largely exceed the debts.

FIRE IN MILWAUKEE.

Milwaukee, July 22.—The South Milwaukee Malleable Iron works were completely destroyed by fire last evening. Loss $20,000; insured.

AMERICAN TURNERS.

Milwaukee, Wis., July 22.—Milwaukee, from a turner standpoint, is given up exclusively to the reception of delegations from other cities and the completing of the decorations in honor of the visitors. Many thousands from all parts of the country are present. The active turners, upon their arrival at the West side Turner hall, the headquarters of the turnerbund, were served with refreshments and then escorted to the barracks at the shooting park, where they made themselves comfortable as far as the circumstances would permit. In the evening the active turners formed for the torchlight parade. The line of march was from the shooting park along Third street to the exposition building, where the official reception took place. The following programme was presented: March, composed by Chr. Bach, rendered by the orchestra; tableaux, "Hail to the Turners," arranged by G. Brosius; address by Judge Emil Wallber, chairman of the executive committee; address by Mayor Koch, also by Gov. Peck and Mr. Heinrich Braun, president of the turnerbund; festival song, words by Max Hempel, rendered by turners and singers with orchestral accompaniment; music; three songs, rendered by the United Singers of Milwaukee, with orchestral accompaniment; instrumental music and special entertainment.

IN FAVOR OF EDISON.

Milwaukee, July 22.—In the suit brought by the Edison Electric Light company against the Electric Manufacturing Company of Oconto, to restrain the latter from manufacturing, selling and using the incandescent lamp, a decision was handed down this morning in the United States court upholding the claims of the Edison company by granting the injunction prayed for. The claim of the Oconto company was based on the claim that a patent of this invention was granted to one Henry Groebel before the one granted to Mr. Edison. This the court decides was not the case, and the Edison people are again upheld in every particular.

FIEND BOMBERGER.

Grand Forks, N. D., July 22.—A reporter called upon Bomberger to-day at the jail and found him reading the daily papers. When the reporter stepped inside, he looked up from his paper and cheerfully informed the reporter that he was feeling first rate. "My appetite is better to-day," said he, "than it has been for some time. Sheriff Fadden is very kind to me, and gives me the best of care. I sleep well and am feeling excellent. Yesterday was the first day that I have kept an account of the number of people who have called to see me; 110 made their appearance yesterday, eleven of them being ladies."

ACROSS THE BOUNDARY.

Winnipeg, Man., July 22—Something of a sensation was created to-day by the issue of a warrant for the arrest of R. T. Rokeby, formerly assistant manager and vice president of the Commercial bank. Duncan Macarthur, the president was also included in the warrant, although he says he is in no way to blame and the warrant has so far not been served on him. Rokeby, who is an English blood, has skipped and is probably by this time safe in the United States, having driven south last night to cross the boundary.

SMALLPOX.

New York, July 22.—A health inspector this morning stumbled over a nest of smallpox in the big tenement at No. 25 Pell street. In one filthy room on the fourth floor, rear, he found a whole family sick with the disease. Constantine Trabaco, twenty-six years old, his wife, Louise, twenty-three years old, and children, Louise, Joseph and Zerola, were huddled together in two beds. The whole family was immediately sent to Riverside hospital.

STRIKERS ARE SHOT

DESPERATE FIGHT IN A MINING TOWN IN KANSAS.

Strikers Attempt to Drive Workmen Away and Are Fired Upon—Four of Them Injured—More Trouble Expected.

Weir City, Kan., July 21.—The expected crisis has come in the Kansas miners' strike, and blood has been shed. The feeling which has been growing more and more bitter for several days culminated yesterday in a fierce battle at Clent's pit, one mile south of this city. All the forenoon there were murmurings of the approaching storm, and the feeling was universal that serious trouble was at hand. Just before noon a band of 500 strikers headed by 100 women, which had been marching to the various strip pits, reached Clent's pit and sent in a committee to persuade the miners working there to quit. This they refused to do, and when the committee reported the entire body of marchers moved on to the works to force the men out. The strip men were ready for them, and when they passed the trespass line they were fired upon and a general battle followed, in which Winchester rifles, pistols and clubs were used. Over one hundred shots were fired and it is nothing short of a miracle that nobody was killed. One man was wounded in the forehead, another in the leg, a boy in the foot, and one of the women got a bullet through the arm. None of the wounds are fatal, and it is believed that none of them are dangerous. A number on both sides were badly beaten up with clubs. As a result of the battle the men in the strip were routed by the strikers and were forced to flee for their lives, pursued by the howling mob which would have lynched them had they been caught. The excitement continues at a high pitch and further bloodshed now seems inevitable.

HANGED TO A TREE.

Ewen, Mich., July 21.—This town was destroyed by fire yesterday, and a man, name unknown, was caught last night who was suspected of starting the fire. A mob was formed and the man was promptly hanged to a tree. Ewing is a lumbering town and has been built up rapidly on a boom. The substantial portion of the town, with the exception of one or two buildings, is entirely wiped out. The loss is a matter of conjecture, but is heavy. Like most lumbering towns it possessed little fire protection, and the companies have written but little insurance. A later estimate puts the insurance at $35,000, and the loss $200,000. There are no stories of loss of life. Nothing can be learned of the man who was lynched.

KILLED BY LIGHTNING.

Nashville, Tenn., July 21.—News has just been received that near Sadlersville, this state, while James Witt, his son, aged fourteen, and daughter, aged twelve, accompanied by his brother, Jack Witt, were walking home, a slight shower fell and they took shelter under a tree, except Jack Witt, who would not, and who warned them that it was dangerous. As he was talking a blinding flash of lightning came, the tree was struck, torn to pieces, and both the children killed. The bones in their bodies were crushed. James Witt lost an eye and had a rib broken and is in a precarious condition. Jack Witt was insensible when found, but will recover.

FEMALE CONVICTS ESCAPE.

Atlanta, Ga., July 21.—Five female convicts have escaped from Maddox's camp in the past three weeks, and the rest of the prisoners there are demoralized. The camp is situated in Elbert county near Savannah river. All the female convicts were sent to this place. All were tracked by dogs to the river, where all trace of them were lost. Two of them were sentenced to life imprisonment for murder. It is thought friends outside the camp must have aided them by securing them boats.

CHINA TAKES A HAND.

Tien Tsin, July 21.—Information has been received here from Pekin to the effect that China has taken measures to support Siam against the French. Siam has for many years paid tribute to China, but only as a matter of usage and convenience, and it is now apparent that China is determined to assist the Siamese against encroachment upon their territory. The interference of China will add a most interesting feature to the Franco-Siamese dispute, and will probably result in a modification of some of the demands of France as contained in her ultimatum.

A BIG BLAZE.

New York, July 21.—At 12:30 o'clock this morning fire started in the block bounded by Fourth and Fifth streets and Jackson and Vernon avenues, Long Island city. In the block are St. Mary's new Catholic church, valued at $200,000, the parish house, the new parochial school and a number of business houses. The flames jumped across Fifth street to a row of flat houses at the corner of Vernon avenue. Then the fire caught hold of the flat house in the rear of those on Fifth street. The church and all the buildings in the block were destroyed. Loss, $350,000.

BURGLAR SHOT.

Ovid, N. Y., July 21.—Burglars broke into the postoffice last night. J. R. Thomas, cashier of the bank next to the postoffice, heard them, and going down to the street, called upon them to throw up their hands. He was shot twice, not seriously. He returned the fire and one burglar was killed. The man is unknown and was between forty and fifty years of age.

ENFORCEMENT CONDEMNED.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 21.—By a vote of 13 to 9 the Commercial club last night passed a resolution condemning the present efforts at enforcement of the prohibition law. There are no open saloons and ten holes in the wall.

SWEDES WILL CELEBRATE.

Ashland, Wis., July 21—Northern Wisconsin Swedes are congregating at Ashland where they will celebrate the 300th anniversary of Upsola assembly to-morrow. Dr. C. A. Swanson of Kansas and Rev. O. Olson of Illinois are prominent Swedes who will speak.

—An eastern editor remarked that a man got into serious trouble by marrying two wives. A western editor added that sometimes a man got into trouble by marrying one. Another editor said he had known instances where a man got into trouble by simply promising to marry and going no further. A bald-headed editor said he had noticed that occasionally a man got into trouble by only being with another man's wife. It seems that there is no safety in living anywhere in this vale of tears.—Ex.

We observe that the Republican press are again waking up from their recent defeat, and are unanimous in the opinion that Democratic free trade is ruining the country. They cite the recent failings, the fact that mills and factories are shutting down and thousands of men are being thrown out of employment, They all say, "we told you so it's the tariff." If the cholera should happen to reach our shores this year you may expect they will say "it's all on account of the tariff." No Republican is expected to know or talk of any political question except, of course the "tariff."

Col Mortan, in the Fargo Argus; Charles Pillsbury's estimate of the wheat crop in North Dakota is, I think about 5,000,000 bushels too high. In other words, I think that we shall be in great good luck if, with the present outlook, we thresh out 25,000,000 bushels. The Grand Forks chap who places his figures at 70,000,0000 or 75,000,000 bushels is either a lunatic or an idiot. His yarn is much like their brick blocks up here—several stories too high. Of course reports similar to that emanating from the Forks are susceptible of doing much harm for present prices, and incidentally for prices later on.

Notwithstanding we do not subscribe to the principles of the party, we cannot but admit that the organization of the alliance, now peoples party has resulted in good to that large portion of our citizens, the farmers, and consequently to many of us other people who are dependent upon them for a part of our living. One instance of their good work is the present price of twine. Before the twine factory was put into the state prison, twine sold at 21 cents a pound. It is now selling at 9 cents for the same quality. The prison factory is responsible for this and the old alliance party is largely responsible for the establishment of the factory. Other benefits, though not so marked have been achieved.—Wabasha Democrat.

Money in Circulation: Of the civilized countries of the world France has the largest per capita circulation of money, over $40. And it is in circulation too; every franc of it is busily engaged all the time doing the business of the happiest and most prosperous people on earth. The per cent of idleness and pauperism is small because wealth is more equitably distributed in France than in any other country. Emigration from France is smaller than from any other European country yet the population is nearly as dense as the densest. The United States is naturally equipped to enjoy a prosperity and universal happiness way beyond that of France, or any other country on earth, yet we are now rent with financial and industrial convulsions while France is smoothly sailing the golden seas of peace, joy and prosperity.—Farm Stock & Home.

St Paul jobbers are sending out notices to business houses in the city that hereafter checks on local banks will not be accepted in payment of accounts as heretofore, the banks of the twin cities having formed a trust and agreed not to accept them on deposite in the future. Local firms are therefore notified by the houses with which they do business that if they wish the favor of being allowed to pay their accounts they must buy a draft on a St. Paul bank in order to do so. To a person unacquainted with the St. Paul methods of doing business it would seem that during the present scarcity of filthy lucre the jobbers of that place should be glad to take money in whatever form it is sent them. Well, perhaps they are, only they want their customers to pay for making the collections. The Times wishes to say that it will not kick on taking the personal check of any of its customers who wish to pay their debts. We are not so high-toned as the St. Paul jobbers.—Crookston Times.

Charlie's Proposal.

The girl with the purple veil examined her gloves thoughtfully. Then she inquired of her friend, "Kitty, did you ever have a real, genuine proposal?"

"Why, ye-es, I suppose so."

"You suppose so—that's just it. The men are so careful nowadays; they edge up to the subject with such care and ask the question in such a roundabout way that a girl doesn't really know whether she has a right to cut a notch in her parasol handle or not."

"Yes, and if she gives a plump 'No' they wriggle out of it in such a way that she is made to feel as if she had said it without being asked."

"True. Oh, for the good old days when a lover would fall on his knees and say, 'Be mine' without any beating about the bush Girls really had proposals in those days."

"Did they?" replied the other dubiously, "at any rate they say so."

They looked at each other and laughed.

"I never thought of that!" cried the girl with the purple veil, "perhaps we will tell the same thing by and by."

"Very likely. But there is Marie—she really does have proposals."

"Heiresses always do."

"Yes. Well, she says that when a man does it too beautifully she suspects that he has done it often before."

"Doing it properly must make the trousers bag frightfully at the knees," said the girl with the purple veil thoughtfully.

"True, but they could wear the ones they do in church."

"I think that in these days of specialties there ought to be a bureau for teaching young men how to propose."

"That's so. Now, when Charlie"—

"Oh, Kitty, you never told me!"

"That's true. I didn't mean to tell anybody yet. Well, he simply said, 'See here, Kitty, everybody is saying that we are engaged—that's right, isn't it?' and I just blushed and said 'Yes' before I thought."

"Oh, you dear thing. When is it to be?"

"In the latter part of October. He is desperately in love—orchids and candied violets. Well, here's my car."—San Francisco Examiner.

Retrenchment.

The king of Dahomey was sore distraught. The cares of state were pressing heavily upon him, and his brow was clouded, with white clouds of course.

The grand vizier awaited the commands of the sovereign.

"You say," the potentate mused, "that this expenditure is necessary to preserve the autonomy of the realm?"

"It is, your serene highness."

"And is war not to be avoided?"

"It is not."

The puissant ruler pondered.

"There is but one way out"—

His lips were firmly set when at last he gave speech unto his thoughts.

—"of it. We must institute a rigorous retrenchment. Kindly tell the iceman that he needn't stop at our house again for a week."

The edict was issued, and the royal seal affixed thereunto.—Detroit Tribune.

HIS OBJECTION.

George Wasn't Jealous, but Perhaps a Little Selfish.

"When you leave Brooklyn for the summer, you should go to some quiet place where you can have a good long rest," said George Remington to his fiancee.

"Oh, I don't want to rest; I want to have some fun," pouted Esther.

"Haven't you had fun enough this winter? I'm sure you must be nearly worn out. Haven't we belonged to the Classon Avenue German and the Hanson Place Dancing club? And we've gone to the theater once a week, and then we've had our choir rehearsal, and every Wednesday night you've had your sewing class at the Young Women's Christian association besides all the progressive euchre parties and [illegible] we've been to. I should think that was enough for any girl."

"Pooh!" observed Esther. "Those things were well enough while they lasted, but I'm going in for a really good time now. I want to go to some awfully swell place, like Bar Harbor or Newport."

"I'm afraid you are a little inclined to be giddy," said George gravely. "I hope you don't intend to indulge in any of the silly watering place flirtations that so tend to lower a woman in the eyes of her friends?"

"Now, whatever you do, don't get jealous," cried Esther decidedly. "You know I hate a jealous man, George. Of course I expect to meet other men this summer, but I hope I know how to treat them properly."

"I have no objection to your meeting other men if you think you can be true to me," said George.

"Don't be a goose! I never meet a man and get to know him real well but what it seems to me that he is you—that is, if he is very nice."

"You think he is I?" asked George, somewhat puzzled.

"Yes, especially if he has bright blue eyes and a cute little brown mustache and curly hair and talks very interestingly. Then it almost seems as if you were with me, you know."

"Y-e-s," mounted George.

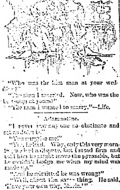
"And if I should meet some fellow like that and I should go riding and driving with him and rowing it would be all right, wouldn't it, so long as I felt as if it were you all the time?"

"Perhaps so," replied George.

"And if I should get to know him better and he should want to hold my hand or put his arm around my waist or—or even kiss me, just once or twice, you know, it would be all right, wouldn't it, for then I am sure I should think he was you, especially if it was on the piazza after dark."

"It might be all right for you, Esther," said George, with a conscientious struggle for exact truth. "It might be all right for you, but I don't see that it would do me much good!"—Harry Romaine in Life.

As It Sometimes Happens.



"Who was the best man at your wedding?"

"The man I married. Now, who was the best man at yours?"

"The man I wanted to marry."—Life.

Adamantine.

"I never saw any one so obstinate and set as John is."

"You surprise me!"

"Yes, indeed. Why, only this very morning we had a dispute, but I stood firm and told him he might move the pyramids, but he couldn't budge me when my mind was made up."

"And he admitted he was wrong?"

"Well, about the same thing. He said, 'Have your own way, Maria.'"

"Of course. What was it about?"

"I declare I've forgotten, but it was the principle, you know."—Truth.

An Experienced Man.

First Young Man (at seaside)—I have met a good many amateur photographers, but I never met one quite so devoted to the fad as you are.

Second Young Man—I never take photographs!

First Young Man—Eh? Then why do you carry that detective camera about with you all day, week in and week out?

Second Young Man—Because when the girls see me coming, all the ugly ones run away, and all the pretty ones stay.—Tit-Bits.

A Great Difference.

Stilton—Aw—er, did you—er—knock—my hat off intentionally or just to make a fool of me?

Tough—Why, I done it intentionally, o' course. Wot's der matter wid yer?

Stilton—Well—er—it's good for you that you didn't do it to make a fool of me, for I—er—allow no man to make a fool of me.—Exchange.

Consulting the Proprieties.

"I've changed the name of my story," said the young writer.

"What do you call it now?"

"'The Engagement Ring.'"

"Why?"

"Because every time I offer it it is returned with thanks."—Washington Star.

Perfectly Safe.

"You think you dropped your pocketbook in Yallerby's store? Then you run right back there, you careless boy, and inquire for it."

A Plea.

Ragged William—I cultivate no second class virtues, madam.—Detroit Free Press.

A Domestic Weapon.

"Let me see your best brooms," said a little woman excitedly as she plunged into a grocery store.

"Green or dried?" asked the grocer, putting his pen over his ear and rolling up his sleeves.

"I said brooms," snapped the woman.

"And I meant brooms," answered the grocer civilly, "but there's a difference. Some are new made and green, while others are dry and seasoned. Some women folks won't touch a real dry broom. They allow the corn seeds come off in the sweeping."

"I ain't saying nothing about sweeping," said the woman. "I want a good, strong shank that is put together for all it is worth and a handle that won't snap the first time I use it."

The grocer trotted out his brooms, and the little woman hefted each one with a practiced hand. Finally she selected one that was unpainted and homely, but as heavy as a cart wheel.

"How much is this one?"

"Forty cents, madam. It's the biggest and best in the lot, though it don't look as fancy as the rest."

"Forty cents! I've used up a hundred brooms since I married that last husband of mine, and I ain't never paid over a quarter, and I ain't goin to, what's more."

"Madam," said the grocer, standing the broom up in a corner, "it ain't a broom that you want, in my opinion—it's a club."

Then he backed discreetly behind the counter, and the sale was off.—Detroit Free Press.

An Interesting Item.

Penelope (blushingly)—Oh, girls, I've such good news for you!

Chorus—What is it?

Penelope—I'm engaged to the fellow you've all been trying to marry.—Truth.

No Joy.

A certain baker in business in a small town in Normandy obtained his supply of butter from a farmer in the neighborhood. One day he discovered that the pats, which were supposed to weigh three pounds each, were not up to the standard, and further examination revealed a steady diminution in the daily provision. At last the baker lodged a formal complaint against the farmer, and the affair was brought before the local court.

"Have you scales?" inquired the magistrate.

"Yes, monsieur le judge," was the reply.

"And have you any weights?" continued the judge. An answer this time in the negative was as promptly given.

"But how did you manage to weigh your butter?" asked the magistrate.

Then the farmer related that ever since the baker had taken his butter he had returned the compliment by buying his bread. The baker supplied him with three pound loaves, and he had used them as weights for his butter. "It is his fault, not mine, if the weight is not correct," added the farmer, who was speedily acquitted and left the court in triumph with an escort of friends and admirers. Since this trial the farmer is said to have been supplied with more than his due provision of bread, but he has taken good care not to fall into the opposite error, and the baker has now his three pound pats of butter full weight, but not an ounce more.—London Telegraph.

Doomed to Disappointment.

"Is this the World's fair?" asked the portly provincial Englishman of the guard.

"Yessir."

"Well where are the highwaymen and pickpockets, and the cholera patients and the drinking water microbes?"

"Don't know. Never heard of them."

"I thought you said this was the World's fair," said the Englishman, turning disappointedly on his heel and pulling a copy of his provincial weekly newspaper out of his pocket to find further directions for identifying the Columbian exposition.—Chicago Record.

A Man to Be Conciliated.

"I'd be ever so much obleeged, ma'am," began the grimy wanderer on the back porch in a plaintive voice, "for a little jag o' cold victuals. I've walked"——

"I don't feed tramps," shrilly interrupted the red faced woman, bending over the washtub.

"Don't call no names, ma'am," said the dusty pilgrim warningly, "and don't ye aggeravate me or I'll spile yer washing day for ye. I'm a perfessional rainmaker."—Chicago Tribune.

A Great Help.

Stout Gentleman—Spare diet, long walks, etc. I could have managed all that without coming to this expensive watering place.

Doctor—Yes, but you forget the annoyance occasioned by the high prices, which of itself will go a long way toward reducing your weight.—Ulk.

Preposterous.

"What trade are you?" asked his worship.

"Sure, now, your honor, an I am a sailor."

"You a seafaring man? I question whether you were ever at sea in your life."

"Be jabers, now, and does your honor think I came over from Oireland in a wagin?"—Tit-Bits.

Admitted.

Her Father—You wish to marry my daughter, I understand.

Her Adorer—I do, sir.

Her Adorer—Well, I suppose I am.—Brooklyn Life.

His Great Mistake.

Riggle—What did Miss Dawson say when you broke off your engagement with her?

Twaggle—She didn't say anything. She was speechless.

Riggle—Good gracious! What a wife you've missed!—Tit-Bits.

One Advantage.

Mrs. West—I have only one neighbor within 10 miles.

Mrs. East—How nice! That gives you plenty of time to find out all about her.—Detroit Tribune.

Still She Was In Favor of It.

It will be run on the European plan. Each room will have hot and cold water, electric lights and be steam heated. The office and ladies parlors etc. will be located on the 3rd floor and the building will be supplied with all modern conveniences. There will be from 100 to 200 rooms for guests.

From this station trains run direct to the world's fair grounds at intervals during the day.

VISITORS TO THE TWIN CITIES.

The lake is one of the most picturesque in the country and is well supplied with steamers and sailing, rowing and fishing craft. A number of regattas will be given. The Great Northern has a double track-line to the lake and runs frequent trains.

An extensive program has been arranged, including many noted speakers, singers, etc., and the occasion promises to be most interesting and instructive. Devils Lake is a summer resort point. A LARGE DROP IN RATES TO THE WEST

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 18th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates, amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First-class from $60.00 to [illegible]; to Spokane from $36 to $30; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

Last summer I was attacked with a bad case of flux, and after taking four doses of Beggs' Diarrhoea Balsam was immediately relieved and cured. I have used it for the past six months and must say that it gives general satisfaction.—J. W. Smith, M. D. Pexico, Mo.—For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

HE SPOKE TOO QUICKLY.

An Ambitious Russian Who Came to Grief in the Big World's Fair.

Dimitry Iwanoff, the head and front of the Imperial Russian troupe of singers and dancers from St. Petersburg, now in this city, is a man of impressible spirit and exceedingly adaptable in temperament. When he arrived in Chicago he had been only two days in America, yet he was already engaged in a hand-to-hand, or rather word-to-word, encounter with the English language. Like all Russians, Iwanoff looked on the learning of the languages as a mere bagatelle, and before his first week in Chicago was over he felt that the English tongue had been taken captive by him—phrase, idiom and syllable. One evening he was standing in the rear part of the auditorium, talking to Dr. Ziegfeld in the same little group with Mr. Robinson and Kirke Sashelle. Presently Dr. Ziegfeld was called away for a moment, and Mr. Robinson, feeling that somebody was due to say something, turned to Iwanoff and inquired:

"Getting so you understand English pretty well?"

Iwanoff caught the words "understand" and "English" and replied with lofty superiority and a magnificent flourish:

"Blenty! Blenty!"

Whereupon La Shelle took him by the arm confidentially and said:

"Do you believe the nebular hypothesis reducible to ordinary comprehension by means of the differential calculus?"

"Eh?" said Iwanoff, somewhat staggered.

The question was repeated.

"Oh," said Iwanoff, smiling blandly, perfectly satisfied with this explanation, "you spik quick!"—Chicago Post.

The Power of Sleep.

The most violent passion and excitement cannot keep even powerful minds from sleep; Alexander the Great slept on the field of Arbela, and Napoleon upon that of Austerlitz. Even stripes and torture cannot keep off sleep, as criminals have been known to give way to it on the rack. Noises which at first serve to drive it away soon become indispensable to its existence; thus a stage coach, stopping to change horses, wakes all the passengers. The proprietor of an iron forge, who slept close to the din of hammers, forges, and blast furnaces, would wake if there was any interruption to them during the night; and a sick miller, who had his mill stopped on that account, passed sleepless nights until the mill resumed its usual noise. Homer, in his "Iliad," elegantly represents sleep as overcoming all men, and even the gods, except Jupiter alone.

Same Thing in the End.

Maud—The word "homely" is not used in the same way in England as it is in America. A homely girl there means one who is fond of domestic surroundings.

Marie—Domestic surroundings are the only things a homely girl has a chance of being fond of, whether in England or America.—Life.

As a strength-restorer and flesh-builder, nothing like this medicine is known to medical science. Filthy Cod Liver Oil and all its disguised compounds can't compare with it.

At a Summer Fete.

At a fashionable summer fete this week, a toilet attracted much attention and won great praise; first, because the wearer—a tall blonde of beautiful figure—wore it, and again, because the gown itself was a triumph of the dressmaker's skill. It was an exquisite tint of silvery moonlight gray—a tint beloved of all artistic French women, and never forsaken by them the season through. It was gored on the front and sides, and slightly full in the back. Round and round this skirt, from belt to hem, were rows of moonlight gray silk ribbon, about an inch in width, set on about three inches apart. At the hem, midway of the skirt, and as a finish to the belt, were set ruffles of white silk-dotted chiffon, scalloped on the edge; these gave a Frenchy and most dainty effect to the skirt that was very uncommon. Bretelles and other airy trimmings of the white chiffon and the silver lines of ribbon trimmed the bodice, and deep ruffles of the same fluttered like huge white butterflies from the elbow sleeves, above long gloves of undressed white kid, stitched with gray. The hat was of silver-laced straw, trimmed with the silver-dotted white chiffon and white moss roses. The parasol was pure white crepe de Chine edged with chiffon ruffles. The only touch of color about the entire toilet was a small cluster of long-stemmed blush roses thrust into one side of the belt, and an enthusiastic admirer wished that these had been omitted and white roses substituted.—New York Evening Post.

Mrs. Hasbin—"Conductor, if you raise that window and I get pneumonia I shall prosecute this company."

Mrs. Woodbie (gasping)—"Raise the window, conductor! I am going to f-faint!"

(Conductor raises window).

Mrs. Woodbie (reviving)—"There! I knew all I needed was a little fresh air."

Mrs. Hasbin (shivering)—"U-u-g-h! that awful draught! Conductor, you will have to cha-a-nge my se-at."

Conductor (politely)—"I scarcely think it will be necessary, madam. The window is a double one. I've only raised one."

Paper Made From Hop Waste.

The waste of hops which brewers cannot sell and for the removal of which they are obliged to pay, could not until now be used in the manufacture of paper and pasteboard because it contains an oily substance which is detrimental to the quality of the paper made therefrom. A machine has just been invented and patented in England with which this oil can be extracted with very little cost. In view of this fact paper and pasteboard can now be manufactured much more cheaply than heretofore.

A General Restorative.

The above term more adequately describes the nature of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters than any other. The medicine has specific qualities, of course, as in cases of malarial disease, dyspepsia, and liver complaint, but its invigorating and regulating qualities invest it with a health-endowing potency made manifest throughout the system. Purity and activity of the circulation are insured by it, and it effectually counteracts tendencies to kidney disease, rheumatism, neuralgia and gout.

PICTURES OF PASSING PEOPLE AT THE EXPOSITION.

Always the Most Interesting Exhibit, They Are Doubly So in Their Unconscious Vagaries—Contrast Between Two Races.

But, after all, the biggest show at the fair is the people. One gets tired of the everlasting walk from building to building and from exhibit to restaurant, and it is very pleasant to sit down at one of the restful nooks and watch the procession go by. For the most part men are all of a kind. But in the great numbers crowding sluggishly along there is always a good number who will repay the search for curios. It is not their personal appearance so much as the little things they unconsciously do. Now and then you find a trait that is adopted by every one. For instance, every one who wanders into administration building and looks up at the dome opens his mouth, and keeps it open at a greater or less width, depending on his habit at the table.

"A Berry Monstrous Watermillion an' I Should Jedge Oncommon Ripe."

The man who eats with his knife will open his mouth when looking at the dome and open it wide enough to receive the cap of a Columbian guard. The man whose fork does duty for him at the table will open his mouth, but he tries to escape the general curse and so he doesn't look very bad. Women try hardest, of course, but they all do it; and it is funny to see their struggle to pronounce the word "magnificent" while gazing at the throne of Jove.

Coming down the plaisance one morning was a chair in which a good mother was seated. The young man pushing her was in better luck than most propellers are, for the mother's good-looking daughter walked by his side and held her wide sunshade over him to keep him from the heat of the day. And whenever she came to a place where she or he must go without the shadow she cheerfully sacrificed herself and carried the parasol over him. Her face was full of the explanation. She was from some country town of perhaps 5,000 inhabitants and was of the prosperous, sensible sort of family that has whatever it wants, without regard to the expense.

Life had never been very far for her, and her heart was sensitive to the impressions of discomfort. She knew the day was hot. She knew the young man was tired. And she simply relieved his burden as much as she could. There was nothing like selfishness, and nothing even remotely suggesting flirtation. That might come later—if the youth were wise; but it would be as much of a surprise to her as anything in the fair could possibly be.

Learn Nothing and Be Happy.

And it was amusing to think what different eyes she would turn on life after she had known Chicago for a season. After she had seen the misery of cities, the wretchedness that lies so close beneath the surface, the haughty arrogance of one-half the world and the the abject humility of the other, that pretty face of hers would harden and grow unconscious. And she would no more try to relieve the condition next to her than she would avoid the impulse now. Good girl! Go on. Learn nothing and be happy.

There is an interesting Turk at one of the outside booths by the Cairo quarter. He is about the medium height of man, but he seems shorter because of his exceeding breadth and the ample mantle that carries the lines of his shoulders clear down to the ground. But his chief feature is the wonderful hat which covers him. That word "covers" is used advisedly, for the hat, in width of brim and tall [illegible] where crown ceases and brim begins. The farthest edge of its circumference touches his shoulder blades. He is hidden completely as to face until you get close in front of him.

He knows how to use the ungainly garment when he has a pretty customer and wants to retire with her for a moment from the rest of the world. The way in which he can extend that wonderful brim about her and bring her face close down to his is simply a triumph. And he does it so easily, his motions are so graceful, his manner so winning, that I verily believe he could gather the elect under that shadow with him. What he says when he gets them there is beyond the power of guessing. But the women always come up blushing a little, poorer in purse and with some souvenir in their hands. Great is the shadowy Turk!

Another Turk, who doesn't at all mean to be funny, looks for all the world like a great, ripe watermelon, left carefully poised on one end. His dark green robe, mottled all over with the blotches which indicate the red core, the streaks from top to bottom and the ridges and creases that come from the natural fall of the garment all carry out the simile. He is a marvel to every one who sees him. But he is the torture of all darkies. They look at him with watering eyes, and they go on with every salivary gland excited.

Two Sorts of Achievement.

It is funny to sit in the refreshment garden just opposite the Persian theater and watch the women go in and out. You can always tell whether they have been to the theater. If they have you can tell whether or not it pleased them. As a rule they are full of regret. There is some amazement, some shade of curious speculation as to how the dance is done, some disgust, and a great deal of trepidation lest some one shall see them and know they are guilty.

By the way, did it ever occur to you that the nation which produced that abomination known as the belly dance rose just as high in the time of King Solomon as it stands to-day? For thousands and thousands of years they have devoted themselves to the gratification of one low passion. It has been the theme of their poets, the prize of their soldiers, the mecca of meccas, the goal worth a nation's effacement. Wars have been incidents. Time has been nothing. Lust has been the occupation of the men, the fate of the women. And through generations of effort devoted to that one end, they have developed a set of muscles unknown in a better people. Lasciviousness has possessed them for unnumbered centuries, and the acme of their achievement to-day is the belly dance. There is nothing so distinctive, so typical as that. They have produced that hellish contortion of the abdomen. Christianity has made a Columbian exposition.

Down in one of the cocoa houses, where that beverage is advertised, the order has gone forth for each waiter girl to record in a note book the comments of her customers. When the artist sat down she brought him a cup of cocoa and waited to hear what he would say. He stirred it and sipped it, and then, turning to her, remarked: "This cocoa is a good deal like my board bill."

"Why?" asked the girl—not because she didn't know, but because she wanted to be courteous to a customer.

"Because it isn't settled," he replied, maliciously.

But when she came to make her record she proved herself a better joker, for she wrote:

"This cocoa is like a bill board."

"Why?"

"Because it is an advertisement."

A Joke in Some Places.

Did you ever smoke one of those long Turkish pipes? Well, it may pay [illegible] do unless you are to the chibouk born. A man who has mastered its mysteries can extract smoke from the long and twisted stem with no more trouble than a cigarette would cost him. But if a man does not know how he will pay a good deal more than the regular fee for his entertainment. Besides that, the young person who has the pipe in charge and who fills it and lights it for you delights to play practical jokes on the Christian dogs who come to him for fun. He has a way of pinching the stem so that a young man devoted to acquiring experience couldn't draw smoke if he wanted to. He sits there with his cheeks sunken and his eyes large, occasionally trying to emit smoke but always failing. Meanwhile the Turk, with no suggestion of a smile, is monopolizing the enjoyment.

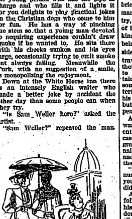
Down at the White Horse Inn there is an intensely English waiter who made a better joke by accident the other day than some people can when they try.

"Is Sam Weller here?" asked the artist.

"Sam Weller?" repeated the man.



Improving the Shining Hour.

"No. Who is he?"

"Oh, he is a rather funny character."

"Aw—no," said the waiter, horrified. "There is no entertainment here whatever." And he mighty near told the truth.—Chicago Herald.

THEIR OWN LAWYERS.

A Number of Frolicsome School Girls Draw Up Their Own Wills.

There is never any telling what half a dozen boarding school girls may take it into their pretty heads to do. Their teachers have been surprised so often that they are generally prepared for the most startling developments, but one of them in St. Louis was rather more amazed than usual the other evening when she found "the young ladies" solemnly engaged in making their wills. Attached to these documents were explicit instructions for the conduct of their respective funerals. The girls were quite in earnest about the matter. They were all pretty well provided with this world's goods, and they had disposed of everything down to the smallest item.

Miss B——, the teacher, who is young and the object of a vast amount of school girl devotion, was decidedly curious to know what ideas these sweet young things have about funerals and kindred subjects. After much urging one of these girls consented to reveal what she had written. She first disposed of the bulk of her property, giving one-third to her elder sister and two-thirds to her younger, because, as she said, the elder one had a husband to take care of her. In case the younger one married, however, she was to promptly even up. Some minor legacies followed, among them being sundry gifts to her teachers and schoolmates.

"Give Miss B——," so ran the document, "my diamond cross, my umbrella with the Dresden handle, and my watch. Have a new mainspring put in it first. Give Miss G—— (another teacher) my books. I haven't very many now, but I'm going to get Dickens in thirty-two volumes on my next birthday."

After the will followed the instructions for the funeral, and these were original and imperative.

"I want to wear a blue dress of some sort and I want my feet covered up, but I do not want one of those little tufted comforters spread up over my face. There'll be about sixteen of them sent in. Don't cross my hands and put a flower in them. I'm sure I don't know just what I want done with my hands. I never know myself where to put them unless I have a jacket with pockets or a muff, and I suppose I ought not to wear those. I positively insist on not being placed on public exhibition. If any measly undertaker gets up and says in a mournful tone that those who wish to view the remains may pass up this aisle and out at the right, I shall haunt him as surely as my name is Lillian ——. Another thing, I don't want a lot of relatives crammed into the first carriages and having a lovely, free ride with their faces so beaming that everybody will think some stingy old codger is in the hearse. I warn you that if these relatives are not put back toward the rear of the procession I shall get out and walk. And I want the children left at home. They can have a ride some other time. I know I don't want them eating cookies and hanging out of the third carriage windows. And I want the grave lined with flowers. Furthermore, as there isn't any law requiring a minister to throw dirt on my coffin, I decline to have that in the programme. [illegible]

GEORGE GROSSMITH WAS KIND.

How the English Entertainer Helped Out a Disheartened Seaside Fakir.

Usually stories regarding the personal characteristics of foreign actors precede their arrival in this country, but the general rule does not seem to have been observed in the case of George Grossmith, the London comedian, who recently returned to England after a brief engagement in the East. He left many friends and admirers in this country, and if half the stories now told of him are true he must be one of the kindliest of men. One is related of his being at an inn at a well known seaside resort one evening when a forlorn traveling "reciter," of the type as pathetically well known to England as to America, gave a so-called "entertainment" in the drawing room. Like some of its sort, it was wearily unentertaining, and when he passed around his shabby hat at its conclusion it was but to gather a Lenten harvest of halfpence.

As, disheartened enough, the fakir was leaving the room, Grossmith, just entering, caught a glimpse of his downcast face and empty hat. Straightway grasping the situation Grossmith signaled him with a gesture to remain, and taking his stand at the end of the room, said:

"Ladies and gentlemen, as the next number of the programme, I will give you a humorous sketch;" and thereupon did so in his most inimitable style.

Amid the rapturous applaud which followed, he proceeded to pass around his hat, exactly as his predecessor had done. The situation was appreciated; silver in coins of generous size promptly weighed it down. Grossmith rejoined his humble fellow entertainer; the modish hat emptied itself into the shabby one. Over them Grossmith smiled his own sly, quaint smile; and "Well, we've done pretty well this evening, haven't we?" said he, and was off before one could say "Thank you."

Of 105 National Banks Closed Since Jan. 1, but 37 Have Gone Into the Hands of Receivers—No Failures in Minnesota.

Washington, Special, July 29.—Controller of the Currency Eckels gave out the following to-day regarding bank fail- eillemxiibt,- vbgkqj vifwgyp cmfwshr ures since the beginning of the year:

"Recent dispatches having appeared in the newspapers that since Jan. 1, 1893, two hundred national banks have failed, the following statement has been prepared that the public may be properly informed: Instead of 200 having closed their doors, but 105 have gone into the hands of the controller of the currency. Fourteen of this number have already resumed business under favorable conditions and possessed of the confidence of the communities where located, and during the ensuing week it is expected that several others will have complied with the requirements of the controller and reopen, while prior to Sept. 1 an equal number will resume. Out of the total of 105 closed, but thirty-seven have gone into the hands of the receivers, the balance having either reopened or are still in the hands of examiners with strong prospects of reopening. Five of the 105 banks are capitalized in the amount of $1,000,-000 each, one at $600,000, six at $500,-000, thirty-seven at $50,000 and the remaining at $250,000, $100,000 and less, but more than $50,000. The greater number, however, are for $100,000 to $150,000."

He also furnished a schedule of failures by states and the number of national banks yet in operation in each state. Against the 105 suspensions there are 3,785 now in operation. There have been no failures in Minnesota and nineteen other states and territories, while in Minnesota there are 77 banks now in operation. In other Northwestern states the schedule shows as follows: North Dakota, in operation, 40; suspended, 2; Montana, in operation, 31; suspended, 6. Iowa, in operation, 168; suspended, 2. Nebraska, in operation, 132; suspended, 5. He says that a majority of those recently failed are absolutely solvent, and only closed through the unwarranted lack of confidence in them, causing disastrous runs.

TRAGEDY ON A FARM

TWO CHILDREN ARE BURNED TO DEATH.

The Home of a Farmer Destroyed by Fire and Two of His Children Lose Their Lives—The Father and Mother Badly Injured.

Grand Forks, N. D., July 31.—Particulars just received of the burning of the house of J. H. Langevin, a farmer living near Olga, a few days ago, show it to have been a terrible tragedy. Mr. Langevin arose in the morning and started the kitchen fire with kerosene, after which he hung the can on a nail in the wall just behind and over the stove. He then went to the well for a pail of water. While drawing the water he was startled by a noise at the house, and looking around saw that the kitchen was full of smoke. Hurrying back he found that the oil can had fallen on the stove and broken. The oil ran over the stove and room and instantly the room was a mass of flames. Mrs. Langevin and the children were sleeping up stairs. The horrified father rushed up through the flames and awoke them. He told his wife to drop the children from the window and he would catch them first and then herself, as it was not safe for them to come down the stairway. Going to the window outside he found one of the children which the frantic mother had already dropped to the ground, but no signs of the others. Mr. Langevin managed in some way to reach the window from the outside when he found his wife had fainted with another of the children in her arms. He dropped both from the window and then turned to find the two other children, but they were not up stairs, and had evidently gone down the stairway into the burning kitchen. He faced the flames down stairs until he was forced to retreat, and jumped from the upper window. As the heat of the fire died away willing hands began the work of rescuing the bodies of the fated ones. When the task was accomplished the bodies were found to be so badly burned as not to be recognized. Mr. and Mrs. Langevin are lying at the point of death, but there is thought to be a possibility of their recovery.

A GIGANTIC FORGERY

New York, July 31.—The World's Boston special says that a huge conspiracy has been unearthed, and probably seventy-three banks and banking institutions in the country were victimized. The story is that certain employes of the Northern Pacific Elevator company of Minnesota issued $1,500,000 worth of forged duplicate certificates for grain in storage in the "country" elevators owned by the concern. These forged checks were deposited with Eastern banks as collateral. About $800,000 was secured in New England and the balance in New York. Some of the Eastern holders of the paper became suspicious, and on an investigation being made the true state of affairs came to light. The stockholders of the elevator were dumbfounded when the facts came to their notice and offers of settlement with the banks were at once made and terms of a compromise offered. The company was then reorganized as the Lake Superior Elevator company. The terms offered to the banks were 30 per cent cash, the remainder to be paid in five annual payments. The Northern Pacific Elevator company is now in the hands of a receiver, and the frauds of its employes have wiped out its existence. Among the New England banks swindled are nearly all the State street institutions here, which were hit heavily; banks at Portland, Me., and various banks in the towns about Boston.

DOUBLE LYNCHING.

Columbia, S. C., July 31.—Two negroes who committed an assault upon Mrs. Sightler of Gaston, were lynched yesterday. Will Thompson, an overgrown sixteen-year-old negro was caught near Columbia and taken to Gaston early in the morning, where his captors were met by a mob of 200 people, who were joined by a hundred men from this city. Thompson confessed that he and Tom Preston and Andy Kaigler, all colored, committed the crime one week ago. The proposition of the crowd to nail him up in a turpentine barrel and burn him was thrown aside and he was hung to a small tree. Before the hanging Arch Sightler, husband of the woman, laid fifty lashes upon the wretch's bare back with a heavy buggy trace, every blow bringing blood. When he got tired another man took his place and continued the whipping. Thompson could not stand, and the rope around his neck choked him. Then a hundred men fired into his body with pistols. At 11 o'clock Preston was captured and was taken to the scene of the early morning tragedy and treated in the same manner.

The defaulting teller has been connected with the bank for twenty-five years, and has always been considered an upright man. He admits his responsibility for the loss of the money, and asks that he be committed to prison.

LIVELY TIMES THESE

FREE FIGHT IN THE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Members Pummel Each Other in True Fistic Style—Healy and Redmond in the Thickest of the Little Scrimmage.

London, July 28.—On the government programme last evening 10 o'clock was the hour set for closure debate in committee of the whole on the home rule bill. The parts of the bill left over for the discussions of the last week and for the divisions this evening were the new financial clauses, the schedules and the preamble. Mr. Chamberlain made the closing speech, which was very bitter against the bill. He had been warned by mutterings from the Irish benches that a storm was gathering. He could hardly have expected the suddenness with which it broke, for with his half-finished reference to Herod there came from the Nationalists such a roar of indignation as has not been heard in the house since the days of Parnell. T. P. O'Connor sprang to his feet and leaning towards Mr. Chamberlain shouted "Judas" so loudly that the epithet could be heard throughout the house. The rest of the Irishmen took up the cry, and for half a minute shouted "Judas" in chorus. Meantime half of the Unionists had climbed to the benches and were shouting "gag," "gag." Others were struggling in the aisles or between the benches with Radical, Liberal or Irish antagonists. Curses, yells of pain, and gross insults were heard on every side. John Logan, Liberal, ran down to the first opposition bench and began upbraiding Edward Carsen, a Tory. As he shook his fist under Mr. Carsen's nose, George Wyndham and William Fisher jumped to the assistance of their party colleague and seized Mr. Logan by the neck, threw him to the floor head first and then bunted him under a bench. Some one smashed Tim Healy's hat down over his eyes. Healy took off the hat and sprang into the aisle in full fighting posture. Mr. Hanbury shouted that the chairman must name Mr. O'Connor for trying to go by he was knocked over a bench by the force of the concussion before Mr. Healy got in a blow. The free fight then broke out at the top ofthe gangway. Blows were struck right and left. Members fell and were picked up by their friends to fight again. The whole space between the benches was filled with a struggling, cursing mass of members, clawing and upsetting each other. Manful efforts were made to separate the combattants. Both sergeants-at-arms forced their way through the thick of the fight, but as fast as one group was pacified another came to blows. Eventually quiet was restored, apologies were made and the home rule bill was announced as having passed the committee.

Brooklyn, Ind., July 28.—George P. Moss has been running a saloon in this place for some time past, and it did not meet with the approval of the better class of citizens. A. P. J. Kolberg, editor of the Skaffaren the well known Swedish paper of St. Paul, is visiting friends in Black River township this week.

These are busy days for farm machinery men and they are all reporting good sales. As usual a large number of binders and mowers will be sold here this year.

The farmers are all busy haying and we understand that they are putting up large amounts this year. Hay is bound to be a good pride this fall and should command a ready sale.

Deputy Sheriff M. E. Losey was in town to day on business. He has just returned from a two weeks trip to the World's Fair and says that it is the "biggest show on earth."

This is the season of the year we get the frost that injures the wheat if it comes at all, but it looks as if we would have a warm month with very little danger to the growing crops.

Died: On Friday morning July 28th in Rocksbury township, O. B. Haugen, aged 78 years. The deceased has been a resident here for the past three years He was Mrs J. L. Johnson's and O. A. Wiste's grandfather.

S. M. Dainard reports that the graded road on the town line west of here has been finished in good shape, This will connect with the road running through Sanders and will prove a help to the farmers in that direction.

Chas. T. Berg, of Grand Forks, is visiting friends here this week: He is the cashier of the general agent of the N. Y. Life Ins. Co., at Grand Forks. His many friends here will be pleased to know that he is prospering.

J. H. Cook, of St. Paul, arrived last Thursday and has been spending the week visiting his father-in-law, O. H. Peters. He expects to return the latter part of this week and his family who have been here for the past month will accompany him.

The fair at Crookston last week was a decided success. While it was too early to display the farm products of the county, the live stock was very well represented, Polk county contains some very fine horses and cattle. To promote this industry is the object of the fair and we wish them success, as stock raising and not wheat raising needs encouraging at present, Better stock means better prices for the farmer and with wheat at the present price the farmer must turn their attention to something else.

We learn that the township of Black River has graded four miles of road to connect with the muskeg road this season. They now have a first class graded road running from here to Polk Center. The people of Black River deserve great credit for the work they have done.

St. Hilaire was well represented at the Crookston fair last week among those who attended from here were the following: E. M. Hoff, wife and daughter, Miss Esther Holmes, Miss Annie Cliffgard, Dan Patterson, C. G. Rapp, O. F. Post, S. M. Dainard, H. E. Ives, Wm. Stranahan, M. E. Bjork, Fred Eikhof and Martin Williams.

Dr. O. K. Winberg, who has been in town the past week has decided to locate here permanently. He is a graduate of the medical department of the University of Minnesota and has been practicing the past two years at Willmar Minn. Dr. Winberg comes highly recommended and as there is an excellent opening here for a physician he should do well.

Barley is already being harvested and the harvest of wheat will commence on the sand ridges in many places the last of this week. The grain on the ridges is very good in places and rather poor in other places. It will hardly be an average yield. On the lower land it will be at least a week before any grain is cut and many fields will require two weeks and more. While wheat has improved greatly the past three weeks it will not be a big crop as it stands light on the ground with good weather it will fill nicely and be a good grade.

Harry Ives, of the St. Hilaire Spectator, is opposed to county division principally on the grounds that his town will not fall heir to a county seatship, owing to the fact that Red Lake Falls has a much larger vote than St. Hilaire However, Mr. Ives is confident that if the division project goes through St Hilaire can offer much better inducements toward securing the county seat than Red Lake Falls. The Courier understands that Red Lake Falls is bonded to its full limit, and in addition has a floating indebtedness of $12,000 to $15,000, which is not a very good showing. St. Hilaire is out of debt, and has money in its treasury, and when it comes to offering a bonus in lands and money to secure the county seat St. Hilaire will be right in it. So will Harry Ives.—East Grand Forks Courier

Among the many proverbs that have been smashed by the modern scientific iconoclast is that one which runs: "Early to bed and early to rise makes a man healthy, wealthy and wise." A London physician has been making a study of the subject and finds that 80 per cent of the people over 80 years of age have been in the habit of sitting up until the small hours and never rising until the day is well aired. "Early rising" says the doctor, "tends to exhaust the physical powers and shorten life." There ought to be great consolation in this for small Boys and newspaper men.—Ex.

When will the agricultural lands on the Red Lake reservation be opened to settlement and pine thrown on the market? This is the question that is interesting a great many people all over the country. Hardly a mail but brings letters to people who are suppose to know something about it asking for information regarding the reservation. Also Michigan and Wisconsin lumbermen have their weather eye upon the pine forests. Many of the lumbermen who have mills in the worn out districts of Michigan have personally cruised the pine lands on the reservation so that when the sales are made they may bid intelligently.

But the question as to when the reservation will be opened is still apparently about as far from solution as at any time since the Nelson bill was passed.

According to this bill the reservation must be all surveyed and the pine estimated before the lands can be opened to settlement or the timber sold. Although innumerable government contracts have been let and as many as twelve different corps of surveyors have taken a hand in the work, there are yet 48 unsurveyed townships, three-fourths of these are selected north of Red Lake in an impassible swamp and if it is necessary to wait for this to be surveyed the reservation will never be opened.

George Ralph, who has had a number of surveying contracts on the reservation, and than whom there is no one better posted regarding its topography, has just returned from running the lines along the northern boundary from Thief River to Lake of the Woods, says, that with the exception of about ten or twelve towns all of the lands not yet surveyed should be classed as worthless and unsurveyable. It will be almost impossible to find a surveyor who would be willing to take a contract for surveying this swamp. It could only be done during the winter months and even then it would be difficult as it is covered with a thick moss through which the frost cannot penetrate and the men walking over it break through at every step. Its waters are poisonous, and in wading through a portion of it the men in Mr. Ralph's party all had their legs poisoned and were obliged to lay off for several days until a cure could be effected. This swamp is north of the upper lake and extends east as far as the reservation boundary and west to Thief Lake. It contains no timber, not even tamarac and is wholly and utterly worthless.

All the contracts which have so far been let for surveying on the reservation have been completed and the government seems in no hurry to let any new ones.

In the work of estimating there is evidently as little progress being made as in the surveys.

Since Commissioner Lameroux selected that "honest Scotchman" from Wisconsin to succeed Isaac Staples and his corps of assistants, scarcely anything has been done. For thirty days the new estimators who are men selected from all over the United States, not because of their fitness but to pay political debts, have been lying idle in their camp near Red Lake without the least idea of how to go about the work they were selected to perform. There is but one experienced woodman in the whole party. Among the men is a photographer, a horse doctor, two saloon keepers, a newspaper man, a miner a market gardener and a surveyor. But with the exception noted not one of them knows the first thing about pine, Most of them come from the southern states and there isn't a Minnesota man in the whole lot. The old corps of estimators who were let out by Commissioner Lameroux upon the charge of sending in two sets of estimates—one which was correct to the pine land ring and the other, a false one to the government—were, of course, adverse to giving any information to their successors, so the new men were set down in the midst of the pine forest, and being totally unaccustomed to the work they were expected to perform, simply remained in camp and did nothing for the first month. They are "getting onto their job" in a kind of a way now and have done a little work in re-estimating some of the timber previously gone over by the old men, Nothing has yet been done on the new work. Even if rapid progress is made on this new work there is at least six months time to be put in. But if as is expected the old work is to be re-estimated, another twelve months may be added to this.

It is believed that notwithstanding technicality in the Nelson bill which provides that the reservation shall be opened only after the surveying and estimating is all done that the president could if he chose declare the reservation open and the lands and pine already surveyed and estimated could be disposed of but from present appearances it is the policy of the present administration to delay this as long as possible. To the settlers on the treeless prairies of Minnesota and North Dakota, for whose benefit it would seem nature had intended this great body of pine, it looks like a case of taking it out of the hands of the Minnesota pine land ring whose object—if such a ring existed—was to get the pine on the market as soon as possible, and giving it into the keeping of the Wisconsin pine land ring, whose efforts are being put forth to keep it off the market until they have manufactured and disposed of the stock of Wisconsin pine they already have on hand. In the meantime the forests on the Red Lake reservation are being devasted by fires and millions of feet of the best pine are being destroyed each year.—Crookston Times.

Clara—Is it really true that you are engaged to Claude Calloway?

Maud—Yes.

Clara—Before I congratulate you I want to tell you of an experience I had with him. It happened last year at the horse show. You know we were engaged at the time, and he had invited me to go. We had a box, and it was awfully swell. Must have cost him a lot. Well, we hadn't been sitting there but a few moments when Claude got restless, and almost before I knew it he excused himself. Said there was a friend of his in the crowd that he must see about an important business transaction. Now, I know a thing or two myself, so I beckoned to little Willie Clevertrap, who sat only two boxes away. Willie is awfully young, you know, but he has done me lots of favors. Willie came over at once, and I told him to follow Claude and tell me afterward where he had gone. In about half an hour Claude came back with a smile on his face, saying it was all right, and after him came Willie, but of course at a respectable distance. The next day he told me all about it. It seems that Claude walked through the crowd, went up to a tall, elderly man whom Willie had never seen before, and after speaking with him earnestly for a moment both of them left the garden, walked down one of the avenues and entered a quiet cafe. Willie put his coat up around his ears, sneaked in and sat down at an adjoining table. My dear, what he heard was awful. It seems that the elderly man was the father of some girl that Claude was desperately in love with, although of course he was engaged to me at the time, and he was trying to get his consent. Willie says he argued and pleaded until finally the old man said they must get back, and he would see him about it again. Imagine my feelings! Of course the next day I sent him back his ring, and he accepted it without any explanation. But that's the sort of fellow he is, and I would look out for him, dear, if I were you.

Maud—Yes, I will. I should think you would have had some curiosity to know who the elderly man was.

Clara—So I did, but I was too proud to ask.

Maud (sweetly)—I can tell you. He was my father.—Truth.

A Very Painstaking Dentist.

The other day a stylishly dressed gentleman called on one of the leading dentists in Paris. He was introduced into the consulting and operating room.

"Sir, I am, as you may see, a gentleman."

Bows exchanged.

I want a complete set of teeth."

"Nothing more simple."

"Beg your pardon, not quite so simple. I have a few stumps left that require pulling out first. But hitherto I have always shrunk from the operation. I am dreadfully nervous, and the very thought of the instruments makes me"—

"But, sir, you won't feel anything."

"Certainly; I have heard that you employ anæsthetics. That is why I came here."

"They are infallible."

"Infallible, you say?"

"Most assuredly."

"I have been told that before, but can you prove it?"

"Look here. I will myself inhale the fumes of the liquid contained in this bottle, and you will see"—

"That they render you insensible!"

"To everything. You may pinch me, do what you like with me."

"You don't say so!"

And then the dentist, put on his mettle, sat down, took a whiff out of the bottle and fell asleep. When he awoke, the patient had disappeared and carried off all that was worth having out of his drawer and left no trace behind.—Tit-Bits.

He Was Indignant.

"Look here, mister," said the man with a carpet sack. "I'm willin to do anything that's in reason. I am willin to mind any rules yer hotel sees fit to git up as long as they have any common sense back of 'em, but all I've got to say that if yer in earnest you've vi'lated the principles of common sense, an if it's a joke it's a mighty dog-goned poor one."

"What on earth do you mean?" the hotel clerk asked as the guest took breath.

"I allude to them signs ye've got tacked up in my room. One of them says, 'Don't blow out the gas,' and another says, 'Gas burned after midnight'll be charged fur extra.' Now, what in thunder is a feller goin to do?"—Washington Star.

A Sure Cure.

"Oh, father," said Mabelle in weak and languid tones, "I fear that I am going to be gravely ill. My head feels so light and queer, and I am faint, so faint."

"Heaven!" broke in Mabelle's papa, his sympathies deeply stirred. "I'll get a doctor this minute. What can I do for you, my poor child?"

"I don't know, I'm sure," responded Mabelle as she almost swooned against his ample breast, "but we might try one of Mme. Swellstyle's new summer hats to begin with."—Chicago Record.

A Wrong Impression.

Mrs. Twickenham—Oh, dear, that bad boy let off a big firecracker in the pantry, and I am afraid that angel cake I made for you is ruined.

Twickenham—Umph! I don't believe any firecracker would hurt your angel cake.

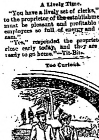
Mrs. Twickenham—Well, it did. There's a big dent in it.—Truth.

A Lively Time.

"You have a lively set of clerks," he said to the proprietor of the establishment. "It must be pleasant and profitable to have employees so full of energy and enthusiasm."

"Yes," responded the proprietor, "we close early today, and they are getting ready to go home."—Tit-Bits.

Too Curious.



The Heiress—Yes, when I don't wish to accept certain men's attentions, and they ask where I live, I say in the suburbs.

Mr. Selfsure—Ha! Ha! Ha! Excellent! But where do you live, Miss Brown?

The Heiress—In the suburbs, Mr. Selfsure.—Life.

Still In the Swim.

A lean, wiry old fellow from the country walked into the log cabin on the wooded island in Jackson park the other morning, pushed his hat back on his head and inspected the interior with evident enjoyment.

"This looks like old times," he said, turning to two young men standing near him.

"Seen this kind of thing before, have you?" observed one of them.

"Seen it before? Well, I reckon! Why, I was brought up in a settlement where there wasn't half of the houses as good as this one. I know all about this style of livin from the word go. And I used to have just about as good a time as the boys have now too."

"I don't know about that uncle," said the other of the two young men. "You're not up to all the fun the boys have nowadays. Trouble with you is you're not in the procession any more. You've dropped out, you know, just as the band is beginning to play."

"Dropped out, have I!" exclaimed the old man. "Dropped out, hey!" he snorted, running his hand into his pocket and bringing it out again full of gold and silver coins. "Back number, am I? Look here, young fellow! Do you want to bet a few dollars I can't outrun you? Have you got a ten or twenty to put up that I can't throw either of you down? Can you turn a hand spring and light on your feet stiff legged? Bet you $50 I can do it! Bet you $100 you can't! Want to try me on hop, step and jump? Bet you—hold on!"

A crowd had begun to gather, and the two young men were edging away from him.

"I'll go you five to one I can jump farther in two jumps than you can in three! I'll ride a mule race with either of you—don't be in a hurry!—I'll chin a horizontal bar 40 times to your 10, and I'll bet money I can—well, go, then, goldarn you, and don't you ever pick up an old man from Hancock county for a greenhorn again as long as you live!"

As he shouted this after the young men, who were making their way rapidly but unostentatiously toward the nearest bridge, the indignant old patriarch from Hancock county put his money back into his pocket, pulled his chin whiskers nervously and moved on in the direction of the Japanese building at the north end of the island.—Chicago Tribune.

His Excuse.

Among the early lawyers of Missouri were Judge James C—— and General John C——, brothers, both excellent lawyers and splendid advocates. General John, when occasion required, closed his argument to the jury bathed in tears himself, with most of the jury and audience weeping too.

One day he and Judge James were trying a case, James prosecuting and John defending. James made his speech, a strong one for his side of the case, and ended with telling the jury.

"Gentlemen, my brother John will address you on the other side of the case, and I want to caution you, he will cry and try to make you cry. He does it in all his cases."

General John then spoke to the jury, making one of the very best of his pathetic appeals, causing jury and audience to forget James' admonition, and as tears were flowing John, with great drops rolling down his cheeks, said to the jury:

"My brother Jim told you I would cry. I am crying, and, gentleman of the jury, if you had such a d——d mean brother as Jim, you would cry too."

John's client was acquitted.—Green Bag.

How He Put It.

Colonel John Hay happened to be in Chicago at the time of the great fire. Shortly afterward, as the story goes, while seated in the parlor of a hotel he noticed two persons whispering and glancing at him.

Presently one of them crossed the room and said:

"Are you Mr. Hay?"

"Yes," replied the colonel.

"You wrote 'Little Breeches,' didn't you?" was the next inquiry.

"Yes," responded the poet.

Upon that the man returned to the place where his friend stood, and bringing him back presented him solemnly to Colonel Hay as "Mr. McKaigius." Colonel Hay received the newcomer politely, though he had never seen or heard of him before.

After a short pause the first man said in an impressive manner:

"Mr. Hay, shall we soon have the pleasure of seeing the great fire embalmed in verse?"—Youth's Companion.

Licked Into Fits.

"I can tell you something that you haven't got," said a German to an American. "We have built a church so long that it takes half an hour to walk from the porch to the pulpit."

"That is nothing!" replied the Yankee. "We have a church where a little boy is carried to his baptism through the east porch and at the west porch he walks out as a minister with his second wife."—Ausland.

DEVILS LAKE CHAUTAUQUA.

The first summer Assembly of the North Dakota Chautauqua comes off June 28th to July 17th. An extensive program has been arranged, including many noted speakers, singers, etc., and the occasion promises to be most interesting and instructive. Devils Lake is a summer resort point. The Great Northern Railway gives reduced rates. Address J. B. Fancher, Secretary, Devils Lake, N. D. for programs and other inform. A trip to the lake and assembly will make an enjoyable outing.

A LARGE DROP IN RATES TO THE WEST

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 6th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates, amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First-class from $60.00 to to Spokane from $36 to $30; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommodations.

Last summer I was attacked with a bad case of flux, and after taking four doses of Beggs' Diarrhoea Balsam was immediately relieved and cured. I have sold it for the past six months and must say that it gives general satisfaction.— W. Smith, M. D. Puxico, Mo.— For sale by J. L. Johnson. Druggist.

Baking Powders Before Congress.

The Pure Food bill before Congress would be a righteous measure for the people, and should become a law. The public want pure food, and in order to protect themselves must know what is adulterated. All adulterated preparations should be so branded, including Baking Powders containing Ammonia or Alum. Then if people want to dose themselves with "Absolutely Pure" Ammonia or Alum, they will do it knowingly. The public have been looking up the composition of Ammonia and Alum and they don't like the idea of eating either in their hot biscuit.

Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder is a Pure Cream of Tartar Powder; free from Ammonia, Alum, Lime or other adulteration. And every investigation, whether in the laboratory or kitchen, confirms and emphasizes its superiority in every way.

THE REFORMED RAKE MYTH.

Not the Roue, but the Patient Plodder Makes the Best Husband.

The engagement of one of our Gotham swells to a beautiful Southern girl forces into prominence that as yet unsolved question. "Why does a lovely woman choose a roue in preference to a man with a clean record for a husband?" What is there about such a man that fascinates a sweet, pure girl? The fact that other women have loved him and he has forsaken all for her, swearing he never knew what love meant until he looked into her heaven lit eyes?

Is it because he has "gone through" so much that she thinks him a society hero? Does she ever think of the misery he has wrought; that he, a man of the world, has taken in his arms just such a sweet, confiding thing as she, crushed and bruised its innocent life, and turned the sweet, pure flower into a gaudy, painted, tiger lily that flaunts itself among the weeds he has left to grow around it, to be cut by society's merciless sickle, and left to die alone? Think you, my dear girl, that because he promises reform he intends keeping his word? Yes; perhaps for a time. Your influence may be good, but he frets under restraint. He has known many women as sweet and as beautiful as you. The veneer of the new toy has worn off. He wants something else to occupy his thoughts. You fret over his absence from home. He complains—thinks you should be satisfied with money and carriages. That is all that is necessary to make a woman happy to his way of thinking. You love him, and let the thorn sink deep into your heart, too far for probing; or, on the other hand, you hate the man you once dreamed was your ideal, and for the sake of the child who bears his name live a lie to save its little life from sorrow and shame. Idleness begets vice. 'Tis not the man who inherits his fortune to spend in fast living, who owns yachts, drags, horses and no brains that makes the husband and father the coming generation can be proud of as ancestor, but the self-made man, the student, the thinker, the plodder in youth; he is the man who knows stubble from chaff, who tenderly holds the wife of his choice to his heart, and forsaking all others, keeps her only unto him so long as they both shall live.

Electricity in Advertising.

It is a very poor field in which electricity in one way or another cannot be made to do good service, and the designer of advertising specialties has lately found several ways to make use of it. The latest device is the invention, just patented, of a Chicago man, E. O. Hart, who has found that incandescent bulbs need not be of the standard pear shape; on the contrary, the glass may be made in most any form desired, and by his method of manufacture the incandescent lamp makes an advertisement that is unique. In several Chicago saloons are lamps in the form of beer bottles of the ordinary pint size, but of clear glass, and the brewer's label pasted on the outside. In cigar stores are cigar-shaped lamps with the manufacturer's name on the labels encircling them, and the grocery stores have lamps in imitation of cakes of soap and catsup bottles. Indeed, there seems to be no limit to the various forms which the incandescent bulb can be made to take.

The eleven Southern states which seceded are represented in the Fifty-third congress by 111 senators and representatives. Every one of them fought in the army who was old enough to shoulder a musket, except two, and they were lads at college in a neutral state.

Dynamite and a Devil Fish.

Monday morning while Col. Goodyear's crew were on the bar and a big charge of dynamite was being raised from the briny depths on account of a faulty cap, which would not explode, the workers suddenly experienced a pulling of the lines which were attached to it. Almost instantly a terrible commotion was heard in the waters, and the spray began to rise above the little boat like immense waves. Suddenly the two workmen who were in a small boat were amazed to see the tentacles of a monster devil fish soaring thirty feet in the air. The foaming sea was about to engulf the little craft when the party in the large boat observed the commotion. The touch of an electric button would have ended the monster, but the cap had been tried, and the only way to save them was to cut the wire connection and the ropes, which was soon done, and the terror of the seas, after lashing around a short while, disappeared, much to the relief of the party. The thrilling experience, as related by several gentlemen who were in the party, is indeed marvelous. No such fish was ever seen by them before, and they all wonder how the two men ever escapd from its awful clutches.

Used to Noise.

They were in a quiet neighborhood and on a suburban car, but the conversation was being carried on in a high key that kept the horses turning their heads all the time to see what was the matter.

"They live down town on the 'L' road," remarked the driver as he kicked the brake.

"You know who she is, then?"

"Oh, no; I said I knew where she lived."

"And may I ask how you know that?"

"Because they talk so loud. People who live in very noisy places get in the habit of not only talking loud, but of pitching their voices in a peculiar key. Didn't you ever notice that? Well, it's so. The habit becomes so fixed they don't know it themselves."—New York Herald.

A French physician, who has studied the habit of nail biting carefully and scientifically for some years, announces that the practice prevails to a deplorable extent among the school children of Paris. The habit, the doctor said, is due to nervousness, and he proposes to cure it by means of hypnotic "suggestion."

BINDING TWINE.

Trying to Reach an Agreement to Raise the Prices.

New York, July 20.—John Good states that he has agreed on behalf of the John Good Cordage Manufacturing company with the National cordage, on a basis of prices for binding twine, sisal and manila rope which are very much higher than those which are now ruling. Other independent interests have not yet agreed to the new prices. Mr. Good believes there will be no difficulty in obtaining their assent. The new prices will not become operative until the cordage reorganization is declared complete.

In connection with the above telegram the T. M. Roberts Supply House state that they have a large lot of binding twine, upon which they quote the following low figures for cash with order

No. 7, jute binding twine, 7c.
No. 47, sisal binding twine, 8 1-4c.
No. 77, Standard binding twine, 8 3-4c.

The chances are for an advance in twine, and it would be better to stock up now. Prompt delivery and honorable treatment are characteristics of the T. M. Roberts Supply House, 508-510 Nicollet avenue and 20 Fifth street, Minneapolis. This is a special cash twine sale.

On receipt of 15 cents this firm will send you by express, express paid, their 575-page catalogue, which contains the lowest prices ever named on hardware, cutlery, bicycles, stoves, tinware, lumber, windows, doors, toys, sporting goods, paints, baby carriages, oils, musical instruments, fencing, pianos and organs, buggies, sewing machines, wagons, rubber goods, lamps, stationery, books, Bibles, queensware, clocks, watches, silverware, drugs, tents guns, carpets, clothing, flags, furniture, hats, caps, etc., farm implements, harness, stack and wagon covers and dry goods. WHEN CANINES GO MAD.

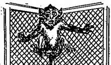
SOME POPULAR ERRORS ON THAT Subject.

The Madness Often Exists Only in the Minds of Brutal Men—Unerring Symptoms of Rabies Described in Detail.

Almost every day the daily papers contain bold headlines announcing that a mad dog has been killed after a "fearful struggle." If you skip the sensational headings and highly colored features it usually happens that there is nobody to be found who knows whether the poor, brutally killed animal really was mad or not. It seems as if the society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals might bestir itself a little in behalf of the much abused beasts, says the Chicago Herald. There does not appear to be the slightest trace of pity or compassion in men who chase some frightened stray dog into a corner and after they have mercilessly beaten it to death gloat over their noble deed. Whoever heard of any officer belonging to the society just mentioned interesting himself in one of these daily occurrences. There is no reason why a police officer should think himself justified in killing an animal simply because it is trying to save itself in flight from a howling, crazy mob that is doing everything to drive it into madness. It is, of course, every dog owner's duty to keep his animal chained or provided with a muzzle, but these precautions are at times of no avail. A fair illustration of the utter senselessness of the "mad dog" scare was had very recently. A handsome young setter dog was playing in his master's yard when some boys stopped and began to tease him. Suddenly the dog leaped the fence and ran barking at his tormentors. One of these hit the dog with a stone, while the others yelled. The animal turned to run, the boys saw their opportunity and set up a howl of "mad dog." In an instant the hunt was on; every man or boy in the dog's path shot or threw something at him. Block after block down La Salle street did the ever-increasing crowd chase the poor brute. Finally driven to desperation, the dog dashed clear through a kitchen window. Here the united force of three policemen armed with clubs and revolvers managed to kill the "ferocious brute." This dog was not mad in the least; if a kind-hearted, thoughtful person had given the poor hunted animal a place of shelter from its mad pursuers it would have recovered from its fright in a few minutes. Now "Handsome Jack" is mourned by its little golden-haired mistress, who refuses to be comforted.



Excited—One Effect of Hydrophobia.

Prejudiced Against Dogs.

There is a large number of persons who have a strong prejudice against dogs for some reason or other. Nobody denies their right to entertain whatever opinions they choose provided only such opinions are tempered with a due allowance of good common sense. But in nine cases out of ten such people lean toward the extreme; it is impossible for them to see any good in what they condemn, be it dogs or men. Reason never enters their heads. If their neighbor should happen to have a dog, especially if it be a fine animal, they immediately cast about to get him out of the way. Their children are taught to regard "man's best friend" as they would a rattlesnake and are never slow in taking their cue. To throw stones or in any other way abuse their neighbors' and other dogs is with these cranks a perfectly legitimate pleasure. It is such hare-brained people who to a large extent are responsible for the many reported cases of the "mad-dog" epidemic.

There is some excuse for people to have a most wholesome fear of being bitten by any animal, be it mad or otherwise, but nobody should deliberately join in the cruel pleasure of chasing a poor dog through the streets because some one has raised the cry "mad dog."

So little was hydrophobia understood previous to Pasteur's investigations that it was regarded by highly competent physicians and physiologists as a variety of lockjaw or tetanus. It was thought that the disorder of the nervous system was caused by the infliction of a punctured inflammatory wound, in which a specific virus or poison took no part. It was not till within the past ten years that the matter was given serious attention. The eminent French scientist, Pasteur, has done more benefit to mankind in trying to find a cure for this dread disease than any living man. Now it is an established fact that in order to produce hydrophoba in a man he must first be bitten by a dog, wolf, pig, cat or any other animal which is suffering from a well-marked disease known as "rabies." What it is which produces "rabies" among dogs is not known and has not ever been guessed at, but it is known that the disease is communicated by "rabid" or "mad" dogs to all warm-blooded animals, even birds.

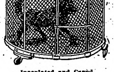
Prepared for Inoculation.

Hydrophobia a Misnomer.

A very grave error is expressed in the name hydrophobia, which means horror at water. This is not simply a misnomer, but misleading in a very serious way. The name hydrophobia having become fixed in people's minds, and the idea that rabid dogs dread water having become part and parcel of the general belief, the sight of a dog eagerly lapping water or willingly plunging into it naturally leads ninety-nine out of a hundred to exclaim: "He drinks; there is no danger."

The fact is, says this authority, that a burning thirst is one of the characteristic symptoms of rabies in its early stages. On the other hand, the name hydrophobia is very appropriate when applied to man, as an indefinable dread of water or any liquid is the characteristic of the later stages of the disease when afflicting a human subject. In dogs, so far from a dread of water being a reliable symptom, it is one which shows itself but in very rare cases.

Another popular error attributes the madness of dogs to the heat of the dog days. In July and August, says the scientist, all kinds of precautions are taken which no one thinks of in November or December. Now the simple fact is that the dog days have no more to do with the rabies than the moon has to do with lunacy. Dogs are liable to attacks in every month of the year, but it so happens that July and August are precisely the months in which the fewest cases occur. The records of the veterinary schools of Alfort, Toulouse, Paris, London and Lyons show that it is not in the hottest months, but in the wettest months, that the great majority of cases are seen. In April, November and December the recorded cases are double and triple those in June, July and August. That the heat of the weather is not the cause of rabies is strikingly proved by the fact that in hot countries the disease is rare and in some even unknown. Thirst, however intense, is incapable of producing rabies. Dogs have been subjected to the cruel experience of complete abstinence from water when chained to a wall under a burning sun. They died from thirst, but showed no symptoms of rabies.



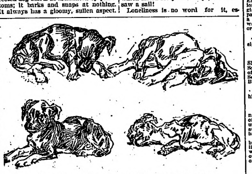
Inoculated and Caged.

Another error is to suppose that mad dogs foam at the mouth. It is only at one stage of the disease that the rabid dog shows any foam. A perfectly healthy dog often shows an abundance of foam at the mouth after a hard run.

As it is most important that the symptoms of rabies in dogs should be remembered, the following of the most notable are given for the guidance of both those who are fond of dogs and those who fear them.

Beginning of Rabies.

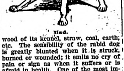
At the commencement of the disease the animal's temper becomes changed; it is dull, gloomy and silent, seeks solitude and withdraws into the most obscure corners. It is fidgety and restless, goes here and there, lies down and gets up, keeps constantly prowling about and cannot rest long in one place. It sniffs and scratches with its forepaws, and appears to try to hide its head under its chest. Often the affected dog starts as if haunted by phantoms; it barks and snaps at nothing. It always has a gloomy, sullen aspect.



Four Stages of Inoculation as Seen in "Harky" Pups.

The mad dog has no dread of water, but, on the contrary, will greedily swallow it.

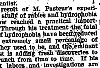
When the desire to bite, which is one of the essential characteristics of rabies at a certain stage, begins to manifest itself the animal first attacks inert bodies. It seems to delight in gnawing wood, leather, its chain, carpets, the wood of its kennel, straw, coal, earth, etc. The sensibility of the rabid dog is greatly blunted when it is struck, burned or wounded; it emits no cry of pain or sign as when it suffers or is afraid in health. One of the most important indications of madness is that the sick dog is always very much enraged at the sight of an animal of its own species. Even when the disease is but little developed it will show this strange antipathy.



Mad.

The voice of the rabid dog is of a marked contrast and can easily be detected. The sound is very husky and jerking. These may be taken as the most important symptoms of the dread disease and are the results of long observation and study by a noted English scientist.

The result of M. Pasteur's experimental study of rabies and hydrophobia has now reached a practical importance. Through his treatment the fatal cases of hydrophobia have been reduced to an extremely small percentage of what they used to be, and the eminent scientist is adding fresh discoveries to this branch from time to time. If his present labors and investigations are crowned with success there will be no need of much fear of the consequences of a dog bite in the future.



Inoculation Produces Paralysis.

THE COLDNESS OF THE WORLD.

No Arsenic Wanted, After All, as the Fellow Wasn't Quite Ready.

A disheveled man with a green, ghastly glare in his hollow, spectral eyes, dashed into the corner drug store late last night, apparently laboring under intense excitement. His bloodless fingers were tightly clenched into his thin palms, and on his forehead the great drops stood out chilly and damp. Staggering up to the prescription desk, he hissed in a sepulchral voice:

"Gimme some arsenic, quick!"

Druggists are not in the habit of dispensing arsenic on demand like sugar candy, so the clerk laid down his pestle and faced about.

"What do you want with arsenic?" said he.

"I want to kill myself," gurgled the frenzied one, hanging desperately over the railing, with limp legs dragging on the floor. "Life ain't no charms for me, and I want to die! Gimme some arsenic, quick!"

"All right, mister," cheerfully responded the clerk. "You shall have your arsenic," and he turned to the shelf.

The stranger's knees caved in against the counter with a thump.

The druggist turned, nonchalantly, with a package in his hand, and without the slightest feeling in his careless voice, went on:

"Any man that's big enough fool to want to die hasn't any business living, and the sooner you shuffle off the better it will be. Now, take this stuff, and take it quick, so we can get your carcass out of the shop in time to shut up for the night. And, for goodness sake, don't muss up the floor!" said he, slapping the packet down on the counter, and turning back unconcernedly to his work.

The fellow feebly shrunk away from the little paper packet, and his eyes bulged with horror.

"Wh-wh-wh-what!" he stammered, hoarsely. "You wouldn't give a fellow being arsenic to kill himself with?"

"I wouldn't?" ejaculated the druggist. "I'd like to know why not? That's what I gave that to you for, ain't it? Hurry up and take it and go off and die!"

With a disgusted expression blazing on his face, the wild-eyed customer remarked:

"Well, I'll be blanketty-blanked! Give a man poison to kill himself with—what's the world coming to—well, I'll be blanketty-blanked! You ain't got no more feelings than a tin tobacco tag."

And with a look of reproach that soured the pulv. sacch. the suicidal citizen stalked haughtily from the shop, leaving the poison unconsumed.—Cincinnati Commercial-Gazette.

ON THE VAST DEEP.

The Vast Solitude and Intense Loneliness of Long Voyages.

I notice an item in the press stating that the City of Peking, in her recent trip, sailed 1,240 miles without meeting a single sail, and this fact is cited as showing the loneliness of the Pacific ocean, says the Washington Star.

In the summer of 1850 I left San Francisco on a sail vessel (formerly from Baltimore) for Panama, distant 4,000 miles, and on the entire route, which lasted forty-three days, we never saw a sail!

Loneliness is no word for it, especially when we lay becalmed in the tropic, with our vessel floating as helplessly about as a chip on a mill pond, the ground swells, keeping up the monotonous roll of the vessel from side to side all day and night and day after day, each roll being accompanied by a flap of the sails and a creaking of the rigging that might have passed for the flap of the wings and the wail of lost spirits.

When we read about Noah and his ark we are apt to think that he must have had rather a lonely time, but then he was out only forty days, and, besides, with all the animals, etc., on board, he had plenty to occupy his time and attention, and if he wanted amusement to while away the time he had only to start a sparring match between his monkeys and parrots. True, there is no report of any such proceeding on his part, but that is doubtless because there was no modern newspaper reporter on board.

I tell you, a man can't realize what loneliness or comfort is until he has made some such trip, and if he wants to complete his education in that line he should preface it with a tramp of 2,000 miles over the mountains and across the deserts amid wolves and wild Indians, as thousands of "forty-niners" did.

A VEGETABLE BONANZA.

A Root That Is Often Quoted as Being the Most Valuable.

High prices are often paid at certain times for drugs, such as quinine, cocaine and others, but a drug is used in New China which in actual value far surpasses anything which has been known here.

The substance in question is called ginseng, and is the root of Aralia quinquefolia. It is so highly valued as a tonic and stimulant medicine in China that it is sold at from twenty to two hundred and fifty times its weight in silver, sometimes for five hundred times that amount. Pearson's Monthly states, however, that it possesses no important medicinal properties. Next to China the drug is produced in good quality in Corea, and is the principal article of export from Corea into China. So much is this the case that the Coreans are loth to part with any seeds of the plant lest their practical monopoly in this root should be invaded.

The wonder is that with such a much-used commodity at such a price steps are not taken to cultivate it in sufficient quantity so as to adjust the balance between supply and demand. The reduction, for example, in the price of quinine was largely the result of increased cultivation of the cinchona plant, and the same may be said of cocaine in respect to the cocoa plant.

Perhaps, however, the foreign substitutes of the real product, ginseng, which reach the Chinese markets from North America and elsewhere, interfere with the native production. But with silver in one scale and portions of the highly esteemed root in the other, it seems reasonable to conclude that the cultivation of the Aralia quinquefolia in North China would be remunerative, whatever the cost and trouble.

Buttermilk for Sunstroke.

If used moderately, instead of water, beer or any other stimulant, buttermilk will ever prove a preventive of sunstroke or heat prostration. As additional evidence other than my many years of personal knowledge, I refer to an incident at Des Moines, Iowa, years ago, when some twenty or more cases of sunstroke occurred in one day, most of whom were mechanics and day laborers, teamsters, etc. So many were prostrated in one day that an infallible preventive—buttermilk—was recommended by the aged agricultural editor of the Iowa State Register, C. F. Clarkson. Immediately requisition was made on the rural districts for the lacteal fluid, and all the drinking resorts were supplied with the ice-cold article. I personally sampled the goods, business having called me to the city, with the mercury at 108 deg. and over, and though over three score and ten, I was on the streets without an umbrella from 10 a. m. until 4 p. m., with no dinner and only five glasses of the buttermilk, which I drank slowly, at intervals. It quenches thirst, strengthens nerves, quiets the pulse and invigorates the man.—St. Louis Republic.

A New Aneroid.

Edward Whymper, the well known authority on mountain climbing, has introduced a new form of aneroid, designed especially for use in mountain travel or for aeronauts. This form of mountain aneroid is intended to avoid the inaccuracies which result from continued exposure to low atmospheric pressure. It is inclosed in a perfectly air-tight outer case and the internal atmosphere is kept at about a normal pressure at all times, except when an observation is to be taken. The cock is then opened and communication with the external atmosphere is established. After the reading is taken the pressure is restored to the normal by means of a small force pump. The conditions thus correspond to those which originally obtained when the aneroid was graduated under the air pump receiver.

The ancestors of the Finns, according to John Abercromby of Edinburgh, Scotland, went in for magic extensively. They lived originally in Siberia. The first historical mention of the Finns which the present day possesses locates them about 1,000 years ago as living in Poland.

The bureau of American republics learns that the latest statistics from Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, give the population of that city as 1,000,000, of which only a small number relatively are foreigners.

Sustain the Sinking System.

This common sense injunction is too often unheeded. Business anxieties, overwork, exposure must and do cause mental and physical exhaustion, which lessens vigor and tells injuriously upon the system. That most beneficent of tonics and restoratives, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, effectually compensates for a drain of strength and loss of nerve power, regulates impaired digestion, arouses the dormant liver and renders the bowels active. It is, besides, a preventive of malarial and rheumatic ailments.

CONGRESS CONVENES

THE EXTRAORDINARY SESSION IS NOW UNDER WAY.

The Silver Question and the Tariff Furnishes Material Enough to Occupy the Attention of Congress for Many Months to Come.

Washington, Aug. 7.—For the twelfth time in the history of the United States congress was at noon to-day convened in "extraordinary" session. The history which the session will make for itself will probably justify that title in more ways than one. Convened for a single specific object—the repeal or modification of what is popularly known as the Sherman act—it will not be restricted to that bare programme, but will have, in connection, to legislate upon the whole subject of finance, including probably a thorough revision of the tariff. Those two subjects, distinct and yet connected, will supply material enough to occupy the attention of congress for many months to come. While the senate will have the great advantage of being guided and controlled by experienced leaders and debaters on both sides of the chamber, it also contains many members entirely new to its proceedings. Its presiding officer, Vice President Stevenson, when he took the gavel on the 4th of March last from the hand of the retiring vice president, Mr. Morton, had had no familiarity with the rules of a legislative body except that derived from his service in the house of representatives during two congresses, and the six weeks of the extra session, but in case of necessity Mr. Stevenson will have a reliable substitute to call to the chair in the person of the president of the senate pro tem., Mr. Harris of Tennessee.

The first business in order after the senate was called to order was to administer the oath of office to the senators and the new secretary of the senate. The senators who took the oath were Perkins, who succeeds Senator Stanford; Mr. Pasco of Florida, who has been re-elected after serving ad interim under a gubernatorial appointment, and Mr. Quay of Pennsylvania, who was not present during the last extra session and so has not yet qualified. As soon as notice was received from the house that it had organized the proper committees were appointed to wait upon the president and notify him that congress is ready to receive any communication he may care to make. This calls for the message explaining the president's reasons for convening congress in special session.

The house was called to order by Clerk Kerr, who has been selected by a caucus of his party for re-election, but who would nevertheless have performed that duty, under the law, as the holding-over clerk of the last house, even if he had not been chosen for re-election. There will probably be little done in the house the first week owing to the non-existence of committees.

FIRED INTO A CROWD

Corydon, Ind., Aug. 7. — Last night Boone township, this county, was made the scene of the most terrible shooting affair that ever occurred in this part of the state. A large crowd of men went to the house of William and Ed Conrad for the purpose of lynching the two boys, who were suspected of killing their father last winter. The young Conrads had received notice some time ago that if they did not leave the neighborhood they would be lynched. Upon this notice the boys armed themselves with shotguns and revolvers and awaited their coming. The boys secreted themselves outside their house when the crowd approached and fired into them, killing John Timberlake and William Wiseman, after which the crowd dispersed, and before they could command themselves they were again fired into and Edward Houston and Isaac Howe were instantly killed and William May was fatally shot. The mob comprised about 100 men, and those killed and wounded are the best in the township. The two Conrads escaped. Intense excitement prevails throughout the southern part of the county. The Conrad boys have always been regarded as vicious and worthless.

A MURDERER LYNCHED.

Memphis, Tenn., Aug. 7.—Sheriff Patterson, in company with a citizen, started for the depot at McCreery, Ark., with a negro to take him to jail at Augusta. When within fifty rods of the jail the negro knocked Patterson down with his fist. He then drew a revolver which he had concealed about his person and shot the other man through the heart, killing him instantly. Patterson jumped to his feet and received a bullet in the shoulder. The negro then ran for his life, followed by a number of citizens. He was captured and taken to Augusta, where it is reported that he has been lynched.

KILLED BY A BOY.

Nowater, Ind. T., Aug. 7.—John Vann, a negro, was killed to-day at the Goose Neck celebration. Tom Singleton, a white man, and Vann got into an altercation, Vann striking Singleton on the head with a six-shooter. Singleton's seventeen-year-old son drew his revolver and opened fire on the negro. A general fusillade followed, seven or eight shots being fired on both sides. Vann was shot in the abdomen and died in two hours.

STRUCK BY LIGHTNING.

Brooklyn, N. Y., Aug. 7. — While Fred Seigling, Lizzie Topel, Ernest Topel and John Maher were returning from East New York last night they were struck by lightning, and Seigling and the girl were instantly killed. The others were severely shocked.

$6,000 FOR A PACER.

Emmetsburg, Iowa, Aug. 7.—James Tobin of this city has sold his pacing stallion Jordan to Ottawa, Ill., parties for $6,000. Jordan has a record of 2:11, and can make it in about 2:07. Mr. Tobin has a great reputation as a driver.

CUTTING DOWN FORCES.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Aug. 7.—A reduction from about $5 to $10 a month in salaries of the operators employed in the Western Union office has been made, taking effect Aug. 1. The reduction is general over the state.

READY FOR THE WORK.

Washington, Aug. 8.—The house was called to order at noon, the president's proclamation was read, and the call of the names of the members was then proceeded with. Three hundred and forty-three members responded to their names, when the house proceeded to vote for speaker, the candidates being Crisp, Reed and Simpson. Crisp was elected speaker, receiving 214 votes against 122 votes for Reed and 7 votes for Simpson. James Kerr of Pennsylvania was chosen clerk, Herman Snow of Illinois sergeant-at-arms, A. B. Hunt of Tennessee doorkeeper, Lycurgus Dalton of Illinois postmaster, S. W. Haddaway of Maryland chaplain. After the appointment of committees to notify the president that the house was ready to receive messages the house adjourned.

The secretary-elect of the senate, Mr. Cox of North Carolina, had the oath administered to him and took possession of the office. The usual resolutions to notify the house and president were adopted, and at 12:30 the death of the late Senator Stanford of California was announced by Mr. White of that state, and as a mark of respect, the senate adjourned until to-day. This prevented the reception of the president's message on the opening day. Statements as to its length and contents are necessarily more or less conjectural. From sources believed to be well informed it is learned that the message will be not more than two columns in length, and that it recommends the unconditional repeal of the Sherman act. Pro-silver Democrats express themselves as agreeably surprised at what they understand to be the moderation of the president's recommendations. They are informed that he recommends the unconditional repeal of the Sherman act. He, however, recognizes that silver is one of the money metals of this country which must be maintained, but points that with the present attitude of European countries, the proper ratio between gold and silver cannot be maintained by this country alone. Therefore, he does not favor the coinage of silver under present conditions except for subsidiary purposes. He thinks the European nations who are now depressing the price of silver can by the suspension of its coinage in this country except for subsidiary purposes be forced into an international agreement more favorable than we have heretofore had. He is in favor of silver on a parity with gold, and stands by the platform of 1892, but says that that platform cannot be carried out for the reason that a fixed parity cannot be maintained.

HELD FOR MURDER.

Quincy, Ill., Aug. 8.—The habeas corpus cases in behalf of the fourteen Kingston White Caps held for the murder of Solomon P. Bradshaw, came to an end today when Judge Bonney decided that the evidence that had been introduced indicated that the men were guilty of murder with malice implied, and should all be held in jail without bail. Subsequently the state's attorney consented to allow Luther, Moore, Sims and William Betts to be released on $5,000 bail each, they having confessed to details that would otherwise not have been unearthed.

FIRE IN LOUISVILLE.

Louisville, Ky., Aug. 8.—Fire broke out in the heart of the retail center of Louisville last night, and before it could be extinguished a loss of between $50,000 and $60,000 was sustained. The loss by fire was about $8,000, the chief damage being by water. The stocks of Crutchen & Stark, clothiers; McGoldstein, jeweler; W. Shields, candy, and Madame Ruble, notions, suffered by the deluge of water.

FLED IN DISGUISE.

London, Aug. 8. — A dispatch from Buenos Ayres states that Gov. Costa of the Province of Buenos Ayres has resigned and fled in disguise from La Plata. In a farewell message to the legislature he charges the national government with abetting the revolution and conniving with the supplying of the rebels with arms.

MURDERED.

Ovid, Mich., Aug. 8.—Henry Lyvere, who lived two miles from here, was found dead by the roadside near his house last night, and John Lape has been placed under arrest, charged with the crime. There was a bullet hole in Lyvere's back, and he held a revolver in one hand and an ax in the other. No cause for the crime has developed.

The murderers escaped.

RIDDEN ON A RAIL

THE TREATMENT RECEIVED BY A NEWLY-MARRIED COUPLE.

A White Man Marries a Negro Woman at Glendive, Mont.—They Are Ridden on a Rail Together and Told to Leave Town.

Glendive, Mont., Aug. 8.—John Orr, white, and Emma Wall, colored, were married by Justice Ray yesterday afternoon. Last evening a mob of over 200 men gathered and took the newly married couple from their house and the groom was given a coat of tar, while the dusky bride was given a white coat of alabastine, ridden on a rail together and given twenty-four hours to leave town, as were the other inmates of the house. The mob then went to the adjoining house, run by a white woman, and ordered them to vacate the front street and seek quarters in the rear. A hunt for several men who live off the fallen women was made, but they did not fancy the treatment of the mob, and made for a railroad track. The men composing the mob were the main citizens of the town, and those who did not take part sanction the work done, as Glendive is a town noted for its morality.

CAPTURED BY TRAMPS.

Lima, Ohio, Aug. 8.—A gang of half a hundred men took possession of east-bound passenger train No. 3, due here at 10 o'clock yesterday on the Pennsylvania road when the train stopped at Delphos, a small station west of this city, and would not allow the train employes to molest them or put them off. They filled the coaches and defied every one. At the first station out a telegram was sent here to the police to meet the train, which was done, but only two of the fellows were taken, the others breaking through the ranks and escaping with cut and bruised heads. The men were workmen who were thrown out of employment by the recent financial troubles in the West, and are on their way East in search of work. They are without money and are a desperate lot of dangerous fellows.

ELECTROCUTED.

Chicago, Aug. 8—Samuel Mathews, employed as fireman for the Chicago Illuminating company, was electrocuted last night. Mathews went into the engine room to shut off a valve. The valve was near the dynamo, and while he was turning the valve with one hand he laid the other carelessly on the dynamo brush. At that moment 4,500 volts of the electric fluid passed through his body. Mathews shrieked, but before the engineer could reach his side he fell to the floor unconscious. A physician was immediately summoned, but Mathews was beyond medical aid. He died within a few minutes with regaining consciousness.

ROBBED THE MAILS.

Washington, Aug. 8.—Inspector King, of the postoffice department, was to-day notified by telegraph of the arrest in Baltimore of George Herbst, a letter carrier, for stealing and destroying valuable letters. His method was a most skillful one. He is the president of the Letter Carriers' Benefit association, and enjoyed the confidence of all officials of the postoffice and has been in the service eight years.

SHOT HERSELF.

Chicago, Aug. 8.—Miss Mary T. Derby shot herself through the heart last evening in her apartments at the home of W. A. Shaw, where she was visiting in company with her brother-in-law, Capt. Black, of the United States army. Miss Derby was a resident of Washington, D. C., whence she had come to visit the world's fair. Since coming to Chicago she has been suffering from insomnia, and it is thought she lost her mind by the loss of sleep.

ALMOST A WAR.

London, Aug. 8.—Just before leaving town for a holiday on Friday Lord Rosebery said to a political friend: "We were nearer a war with France a week ago to-day than at any time since Waterloo." Now that the crisis has passed the facts about the momentous two days of the 28th and 29th of July are gradually coming out. Englishmen are learning with genuine alarm how slender is the thread by which the sword is suspended over Europe.

TREATY WITH FRANCE.

Washington, Aug. 8.—The bureau of the American republics has received official information that the government of Paraguay has entered into a commercial treaty with the government of the French republic by which the two contracting parties grant to each other the privileges of the most favored nation "in everything relative to navigation and commerce, customs duties, commercial taxes or charges," and the rights and favors enjoyed by the citizens of other countries in commercial matters.

DROWNED.

Philadelphia, Aug. 8.—Thomas Russell, aged nineteen, of this city, and Edward Shaw of Camden, N. J., were drowned last evening off League island by the capsizing of their boat. The yacht Annie May, with a pleasure party of eight aboard, capsized at Atlantic City, N. J., during a gale. All of the occupants were rescued except Thomas Sherlin of Philadelphia. He is supposed to have been drowned.

CAUSED BY A WOMAN.

Greenville, Miss., Aug. 8.—In Lake village, Ark., across the river from this city yesterday, there was a shooting affray between Joe Frame and Perry Lasson, two young men of this village, in which Lasson was instantly killed and Frame seriously wounded. The trouble was about a woman.

NEWSPAPER MAN DEAD.

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 8.—Dana Hubbard of this city, one of the best known newspaper men of this section of the country, died to-day at Oxford, Ohio. Mr. Hubbard was formerly editor of the Evening Standard of this city, and of the Erie (Pa.) Dispatch. Of late he has been connected with Chicago and Indianapolis papers.

PILGRIMAGE FORBIDDEN.

Rome, Aug. 8.—The Italian government has decided to forbid all pilgrimages to Rome in the event of cholera continuing abroad.

MET INSTANT DEATH.

St. Paul, Aug. 7.—E. W. Newstrom of White Bear and Mrs. H. M. Clouse and Mrs. J. P. Nordstrom, both of St. Paul, were instantly killed yesterday morning while crossing the St. Paul & Duluth track, just below the Delwood station. The three-year-old daughter of Mrs. Newstrom, who was in the front seat with her father, escaped uninjured. The train by which the party was struck backs down from Mahtomedi to White Bear at a slow rate of speed. Just beyond Dellwood there is a curve and a deep cut, and at the lower end of the curve a crossing. The train had just left Dellwood station and was rounding the curve well under way when Brakeman Albert Taylor, who was on the lookout on the platform of the head car was horrified to see a horse and buckboard containing a man, two women and a small child standing still in the middle of the track. He immediately jumped for the air brake, but it was too late. The car struck the team, broke it to splinters and passed on about three car lengths before it came to a halt. As quickly as possible the officials and a crowd of passengers ran back and found the unfortunate ones lying beside the track. Of the four persons in the carriage the three older ones were dead. The fourth, the three-year-old daughter of Mr. Newstrom, lay in the midst of the mangled remains without a scratch and with only one or two little bruises, though she was badly frightened.

E. W. Newstrom was an employe of the St. Paul & Duluth road, and has been in its service for some time. He was a painter at the shops of the road at Gladstone. The two ladies with him and their husbands were his guests for the day, and he was taking them, together with his little girl, out for a drive, while their husbands were out on the lake engaged in fishing.

FOR SMUGGLING.

Port Townsend, Wash., Aug. 7.—Lee Sing, a Christianized Chinaman who has been employed on the revenue cutter Oliver Wolcott for ten years as the captain's private steward, was arrested to-day for smuggling opium into the United States. The Chinaman's cabin was searched and eighteen five-tael cans of opium were found under his bunk. The amount of smuggling he has done will, it is supposed, aggregate many thousand dollars.

SHOOTING AFFRAY.

Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 7.—Asa Smith was killed and Charles Smith fatally wounded, and their father shot in the hip to-day in Licking county in a pistol fight which began between the father and his son-in-law, William Howell, who was also probably fatally wounded. The fight was about a wheat crop. Howell surrendered himself to the sheriff. All parties stand high. The workmen at the threshing machine fled.

HAWAII.

Washington, Aug. 7.—It is stated that the president will send a message to congress at its extra session in regard to the Hawaiian question. Mr. Blount's voluminous report, including his latest and most voluminous of all, are being carefully prepared at the state department in the form of abstracts and extracts for the president's perusal. The situation in the islands is admittedly critical and a prompt indication of some definite line of policy on the part of the United States is called for.

FATALLY CRUSHED.

Chicago, Aug. 7. — A heavily loaded suburban train on the Illinois Central road was derailed by running into an open switch. Three of the cars were badly damaged, but only one passenger, Miss Myra Bradshaw of Chicago, was seriously hurt. She attempted to leap through an open window and was so badly crushed that she will die. Several other passengers were slightly injured.

CRUSHED BY A CAR.

St. Paul, Aug. 7.—Charles Holmgen, the ten-year-old son of Mr. Holmgen, 522 Mississippi street, died instantly yesterday from the effects of injuries received by being run over by a Lafayette car at the corner of Tenth and Olive streets. The accident occurred in the simplest manner possible, and neither Conductor Larson nor Motoneer J. Smith are supposed to have been guilty of negligence in the matter.

FELL FROM A STEAMER.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—James B. Cutler, the well known real estate man, fell from the steamer City of Toledo while coming from Jackson Park and was drowned. The body has not been recovered.

MRS. MEYER IN NEW YORK.

New York, Aug. 7.—Mrs. Mary Meyer, the wife of Dr. Meyer, the alleged poisoner, arrived here from Detroit in the custody of New York detectives. She was taken to police headquarters for examination, and afterwards removed to the Mercer street station.

HEAVY WASHOUTS.

El Paso, Tex., Aug. 7.—The heavy down-pour of rain in this region for the last two days has literally washed everything away. The Southern Pacific road west of here is broken in many places, seven miles being washed out near Deming. No trains will go through there, it is said, for two or three days.

FURNITURE FACTORY BURNED.

Chicago, Aug. 7.—The furniture factory of the Jenkins Manufacturing company was destroyed by fire. Loss, $40,000; partially covered by insurance.

NINE WERE DROWNED

A TERRIBLE ACCIDENT BEFALLS A PLEASURE PARTY.

A Steamer on Lake George, in New York, Strikes a Pier and Sinks—Eight Women and a Young Man Find a Watery Grave.

Troy, N. Y., Aug. 5.—Early this morning a pleasure party while returning from a dance at the lower end of Lake George, met with a terrible casualty. The steam yacht, which is owned by D. W. Sherman, proprietor of the Pearl Rock house, Lake George, was conveying twenty-nine people up the lake. The little vessel was turned towards the One Hundred-Mile Island house, and was gliding toward the landing when the passengers were thrown forward by a sudden shock. In the dark the vessel had run upon a sunken pier, and before assistance arrived from the shore it sank with all on board. It was only a few moments after the shock when the yacht careened to one side and went down in eighteen feet of water. The shrieking, struggling passengers battled for life in the darkness. Women threw up their arms and sank beneath the surface, and when brought ashore life had fled. Deeds of heroism were performed by the men. When all had reached the shore it was learned that nine persons, all women, except a youth of nineteen, had sunk to watery graves. As soon as possible an attempt to get the bodies was made. After strenuous efforts eleven bodies were brought to the surface. Those who lost their lives reside in Troy, Brooklyn, Hoboken and Warrensburg. The porter of the One Hundred-Mile Island house was acting as pilot when the boat struck. Following is a correct list of the drowned: Miss Hattie Hall, Brooklyn; Bertha Benedict, Montclair, N. J.; Miss Edith Harding, Hoboken, N. J.; Miss H. M. Burton, Jersey City; Mrs. J. H. Mitchell, Burlington, N. J.; F. C. Mitchell, Burlington, N. J.; Lizzie Corley, Burlington, N. J.; Clara Black, Burlington, N. J.; Lizzie Clark, Bridgeport.

SHOT HIMSELF.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—Driven to a condition of irresponsibility by the swallowing up of his resources, with the frosts of sixty years upon his head and no prospects for the future, Nelson Van Kirk, a well known operator in grain and provisions, shot and instantly killed himself. About two weeks ago he was caught in the slump in wheat, and compelled to announce his failure. For the past two or three days his friends have noticed that he was considerably depressed in spirits, but this was attributed to his poor health. Up to ten minutes before shooting himself he seemed to those in the room to be in his usual spirits. The deceased was a widower and leaves several married children and one single daughter, the latter having attained considerable reputation as a singer.

FIREWORKS EXPLODE.

St. Louis, Aug. 5.—As an opening to a local exhibition fireworks, with the bombardment of Fort Sumter, there was a big parade last evening in which numerous floats representing battle ships, etc., were used. One of the floats represented Fort Sumter and a plentiful supply of fireworks was aboard. At the corner of Sixth and Pine streets the fireworks in some manner caught fire and exploded, fatally injuring Frank Welch and Emil Dill, who were on the float, and slightly wounding Bob Berryman, a youngster who was following the procession.

DAMAGE SUITS.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 5.—Three suits for heavy damages have been brought against the Carnegie Steel company by victims of the Homestead poisoning conspiracy for which Hugh Dempsey, ex-district master workman of the Knights of Labor, and two others are now serving terms in the penitentiary. The suits were entered by Mrs. Hebson, who claims $25,000 damages for the death of her son, and Edward Ellis and Harry Collins, who claim that their health has been permanently impaired. They ask $10,000 each.

MURDERED EIGHT PEOPLE.

Trenton, Mo., Aug. 5.—Joseph H. Howell was hanged here this morning. Howell passed last night in prayer and ate a hearty breakfast this morning. Howell murdered Mrs. Nancy Hall and her seven little children seven miles west of Brookfield, Mo., on the night of Jan. 10, 1892, for the purpose of robbery.

FIRE WATER ON FIRE.

Chicago, Aug. 5.—The wholesale liquor establishment of Chapin & Gore was damaged to-night to the extent of $40,000. The fire loosened several of the electric light wires, and several firemen were badly shocked, none of them, however, being fatally injured.

SUICIDE OF A SINGER.

New York, Aug. 5.—Mamie B. Thorne, aged twenty-four, a handsome actress, choir singer and music teacher, committed suicide last night. It is said her father is a wealthy mine owner in San Francisco.

OIL BURNED.

Pittsburg, Aug. 5.—During a heavy storm at Corapolis, Pa., to-day a tank containing 35,000 barrels of oil, was struck by lightning and the oil ignited. It is still burning fiercely, but no damage to surrounding property is apprehended. The tank and oil belonged to the Producers' Oil company.

EARTHQUAKE.

London, Aug. 5.—An earthquake shock was felt last night in the Charnwood Forest district, eight miles from Leicester. The shock was also felt in Leicester, but less distinctly.

WORK SUSPENDED.

Scranton, Pa., Aug. 5.—The Scranton Lace Manufacturing company has temporarily suspended work in all departments except the finishing, on account of the depressed market. Nearly 400 operatives are affected.

FIRE AT PRINCETON.

Princeton, Minn., Aug. 5.—One-third of the business part of the village is in ruins. Fire broke out at midnight, burning the First National bank, North Star hotel and six other business houses. Loss, $50,000; partly insured.

The price of wheat declined 1½ cents the day after the president delivered his gold standard message to congress. This looks like restored confidence, but Wall street is happy and what's the odds.

We were out this week looking over the new graded road. It was made by S. M. Dainard and he has done a good job. It is a move in the right direction and the work should not be stopped until there is a good road through Sanders to the ridge.

Harvest has already commenced and a majority of the farmers of this part of the county will commence this week. On the sand ridges work was commenced last week. While the yield does not promise to be large the indications at present are that there will be a fair yield of first class wheat. Another week will see most of the wheat in shock but some fields will not be cut for at least two weeks.

P. O. Haaglund is having hard luck with his horses. Three have already died and one more is sick. The disease baffles the skill of the veterinarians as none who have seen the horses can tell what it is, The last two that have died have been sick about two weeks.

The price of wheat touched the lowest point in forty years last week. No. 1 hard was worth 40 cents here and no. 1 northern 38 cents. Prices are several cents higher this week. It is claimed that the financial situation is responsible for the extremely low price.

The St. Paul Daily News says. "Wheat fell in price because too much of it was raised. Silver has fallen in price because too much of it was produced." With miners crying for bread and farmers straining their eyesight to catch sight of a silver dollar, comment is unnecessary.

Congress convened in special session last Monday. Speaker Crisp was re elected. President Cleveland's message dealt wholly with the financial question He favors the speedy repeal of the silver bill and wants congress to adopt a gold basis, Wall street is delighted and well they may be for they have apparently won a victory,

A Denver judge holds that nine out of ten tramps are creatures of uncontrolable circumstances and unjust discrimination, and refuses to convict them for vagrancy. He is right. Tramps and millionairs are the natural result of the same cause, Injustice, either legal or illegal. Stop making the latter and the former will soon take care of themselves.

Now that the St. Paul banks are in trouble the St, Paul papers are telling the people to have confidence in the banks and all will be well. The St. Paul banks are in a nice condition to raise that cry when it has been less than a month since they issued that circular which practically said "we have no confidence in the integrity or worth of any bank or business man in the state outside of the cities and we will not receive their checks." It is such actions as these that causes panics and the St. Paul banks, deserve all the trouble they have caused.

Talking about playing even, Charlie Brink takes the cake, Several days ago Charley lost a button off his pants and secured the help of Hosey Tway to fasten a patent one on. Hosey did it in good shape not only putting it through the trousers but through Charley's shirt as well. When bed time came Charley had trouble about disrobing and was compelled to call for help. He resolved to get even and likewise the next day he did it. He secured several dogs and went hunting for fleas and transferred about a dozen under Hosey's collar. Hosey hasn,t had time to smile since but Charley feels better and so do the dogs.

LINCOLN'S PROPHECY.

It has indeed been a trying hour for the Republic, but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands, and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of war,

A newspaper has 5,000 readers for each 1,000 subscribers. A merchant who puts out 1,000 hand bills gets possibly 300 or 400 people to read them—that is, if the boy who is trusted to distribute them does not chuck them under the sidewalk. The handbills cost as much as a half column advertisement in the home newspaper. All the women and girls and half the men and boys read the advertisement. Result: the merchant who uses the newspaper has 3,500 more readers to each 1,000 of the papers readers. There is no estimating the amount of business that advertising does bring to a merchant, but that each $1 invested in advertising brings to the investors somewhere from $20 to $100 worth of business, there can be no doubt.—Ex.

Let every man who is in debt or who is even with the world, talk and vote for free and unlimited coinage of silver because the more money we have the better will be the business and the easier it will be to pay your debts; but if you have money at interest well secured or have some one tied up with promissory notes and chattle mortgages then favor the repeal of the Sherman Silver purchasing law and down silver in every way for the less money in circulation the harder the times will get and you will have a splendid chance to sinch some fellow, sell him out at sheriff's sale and buy in his stock, farm machinery and farm at about one-fourth its value and make a profit of about seventy five per cent, then the other fellow will be your renter and later on perhaps your serf, if he don't turn out a tramp or a criminal in which event you can have him arrested for a vagrant and hire him to some corporation under the prison contract system to compete with free and honest labor. This method of despoiling the poor and unfortunate of their property is what is wished for by every man who is opposing the free and unlimited coinage of silver. Laborer when you hear a man bidding for a single gold standard know at once that that cuss is seeking your degradation and wants to see your wages still further reduced. Farmer, look out for the advocate of gold with his "gold coin or its equivalent." In his contract, he is scheming to defraud you of your home and make your sons and daughters his servants, lackeys, tenants and later on his serfs. What few poor people are in favor of a single gold standard are simply the foolish dupes or knavish henchmen of the rich classes who either don't know much or are willing to help the rich to despoil and ruin their poor bretheren in consideration of their small share of plunder which the gold robbers give them.—Crookston Tribune

Reports from Chicago indicate that affairs in the financial world at that place are not brightening to any extent, and there has been no marked change during the past week. The price of wheat has dropped to the lowest point since 1856 and the speculative interest to help sustain values has gone out of it. The low price has brought in large export orders, and over $1,500,000 in gold has been ordered shipped there from Europe and Canada to help pay for it. Were the foreigners to take $10,000,000 bushels of wheat from Chicago it would materially help the situation and relieve the banks as they have over $12,000,000 tied up in carrying the 20,000,000 bushels, Bankers have refused to take the shippers exchange except at a discount of $5 to $10 so that shipping operations have been curtailed: The indications are that the Chicago bankers who are anxious to have the wheat moved out will change their attitude and take the shippers exchange at a reasonable figure and relieve the situation, The demand for money from nearly all classes of barrowers is good, but they are not having an easy time in securing loans. As a precautionary measure the clearing house banks have agreed to issue clearing house certificates in case of emergency but up to the present time none have been issued.—Lumberman.

Actions Louder Than Words.

They sat late by the flickering firelight.

Her head was nestled on his heaving and manly bosom, and softly his arm stole round her yielding waist.

The law takes no cognizance of this class of stealing.

Nobody does, if proper precautions are observed, except the two interested parties.

Oh, love!

Oh, rapture!

He had told her the sweet words over and over again, and she coyly cooed them back to him.

A step was heard in the hall.

That is to say, it was heard by the girl.

The young man heard nothing except the beating of a fond heart.

"George," she murmured, "what would you do to show your love for your little kitsirkin?"

"Dearest," he responded fervently, "anything, everything. I would willingly—oh, so willingly—suffer any pain for you."

"Are you sure, George?" she asked with the insistence of doubt.

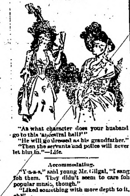
"Sure as the stars do shine, darling."

Again that step.

"Then, George," she said, with a little sob, "get ready, for papa's coming."

And the craven coward skipped.—Baltimore Telegram.

Barred Out.



"As what character does your husband go to this 'ancestral ball?'"

"He will go dressed as his grandfather."

"Then the servants and police will never let him in."—Life.

Accommodating.

"Y-a-a-s," said young Mr. Gilgal, "I sang foh them. They didn't seem to care foh popular music, though."

"Liked something with more depth to it, eh?"

"Y-a-a-s. That's what they said. So I gave it to them."

"What did you sing?"

A News Average.

Hustling Editor—How many murders did that man commit?

Assistant—One reporter says three, another says five, and another says nine.

Hustling Editor—Three, five, nine, eh? Oh, well, we'll have to strike an average. Make it 359.—New York Weekly.

Considerate.

"Oh, dear!" said Mrs. Younghusband. "I'm not myself today."

"Then I won't speak to you or smile at you. It might make you jealous," said Younghusband.—Harper's Bazar.

Who He Was.

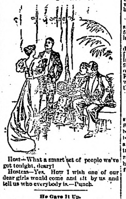
Ethel—Papa, did you see that old gentleman sitting opposite us in the train car with the sad, dejected expression on his face?

Papa—Yes, dear; an interesting face truly.

Ethel—I wonder what misfortune could have befallen him to cause that sad, pitiful expression—those deep lines of care and that faraway look in his eyes. Do you suppose that death has robbed him of some loved one?

Papa—No, little one; he is the editor of a humorous paper.—Tit-Bits.

The Rising Generation.



Host—What a smart set of people we've got tonight, deary!

Hostess—Yes. How I wish one of our dear girls would come and sit by us and tell us who everybody is.—Punch.

He Gave It Up.

"Our cook left us a few days ago," said a depressed looking newspaper man the other evening. "She said she couldn't live in a house the head of which lived so irregularly and kept such terribly bad hours, even if his wife was ill. And there has been nothing but trouble for me since. I had to get my own breakfast this morning.

"That was bad enough, but this afternoon as a direct result of the cook's unhappy departure I was placed in a most embarrassing position." And the recollection caused the newspaper man to look very mournful indeed.

"I started for an intelligence office with the firm intention of getting a cook or of leaving for a tropical country where one can live on raw fruit. Several alleged cooks passed in review before me, but none of them suited me.

"While I was questioning one, a good looking, modestly dressed woman entered the place. Something about her appearance struck me favorably. I said to myself, 'There's the cook I want,' and I started for her.

"I recall now that the manager made an attempt to attract my attention, evidently realizing my intention. But I took no notice of her.

"My state of mind was such owing to the departure of our cook that it never occurred to me that anybody else should want to procure servants. I touched the new arrival on the arm and said: 'You're the very woman I want for a cook. What are your terms?'

"Lord! She turned slowly around, put up a pair of those long handled glasses—I forget what you call 'em—and calmly looked me over. 'I want a tall footman,' she said. 'You are tall. What are your terms?'

"We are still without a cook."—New York Times.

Hardly Equal to It.

"You say you can write shorthand?" said the city editor.

"I can, sir," replied the applicant for a job. "When it comes to shorthand, I don't knuckle down to anybody."

"Have you had any experience in reporting a meeting?"

"Lots of it. I can take a full report of the proceedings in shorthand and put it in shape for the printers afterward. That's child's play for me."

"Report any kind of meeting, can you?"

"Yes, sir."

"H'm!" said the city editor, "there is a sort of convention at Saddler's hall in the next block. You may go and report the proceedings. Write the speeches out in full."

The applicant for a place on the city editor's staff took his notebook and went away. And he never came back. When he got to Saddler's hall, he found he had been sent to report the proceedings of a convention of deaf mutes.—Chicago Tribune.

Too Far.

The author of "A Man of Letters Under the Empire and the Restoration" tells a story which is an example of delicate but cutting French satire.

A glutton who was conspicuously overeating at a dinner excused himself from time to time by quoting the poet Boileau's well known line, "In eating well I praise the food."

"Ah, sir," said one of the guests, significantly, "you carry praise to the point of flattery."—Youth's Companion.

Proof Enough.

He—What proof have I that you really love me?

She—Proof! Did I not dance with you at the Astorbilt ball?

"Yes, but I don't consider that any proof of affection."

"You would if you knew how badly you dance."—New York Weekly.

Hard Luck.

Jimpson—By George, there goes a fellow with my umbrella.

Potties—Well, why don't you make him give it up?

Jimpson—Confound it, the man I got it from is right behind him. Just my infernal luck!—Troy Express.

Let Her Go.

"Georgie," said his mother, "I will not whip you this time if after this you will promise to be a good little boy like Willie Jones."

"Mamma," said Georgie earnestly, "you may whip me, please."—Chicago Record.

A Wholesale Transaction.

"You want those shoes shined?" asked a city hall bootblack of a man with enormous feet.

"Yes, of course."

"Well, you'll have to pay by the hour."—Texas Siftings.

Not Much!

Beggar—What! Throw up a sure thing for an uncertainty?—Tit-Bits.

Pretty Thin Stuff.

The extreme thinness of the gold on cheap jewelry has long been a subject for jest by humorists. A party of Boston jewelers was being shown through one of the great plating factories by the proprietor, a man well known as a wag. As the visitors stood looking into one of the vats where different articles were being plated with gold by means of a chemical process, a gentleman asked:

"Uncle John, just how much gold do you use here in your business?"

The old man looked up and answered, with a twinkle in his eye: "Well, boys, I'll tell you. When I started in, 15 years ago, I put a $10 goldpiece into the vat, and I guess there's some of it left yet!"—Boston Journal.

ANKLE DEEP IN PRECIOUS STONES.

An Experience That May Be Had in the Petrified Forest of Arizona.

From the Atlantic and Pacific railroad it is not hard to reach one of the greatest of natural curiosities—the petrified forest of Arizona. Much the nearest point is the little station of Billings, but there are the scantiest accommodations for the traveler.

Only a mile south of the track, at that point, one may see a low, dark ridge, marked by a single cottonwood tree. Walking thither (over a valley so alive with jack rabbits that there is some excuse for the cowboy's declaration to a writer for St. Nicholas that "you can walk clear across on their backs!") one soon reaches the northern edge of the forest, which covers hundreds of square miles. Unless you are more hardened to wonderful sights than I am, you will almost fancy yourself in some enchanted spot. You seem to stand on the glass of a gigantic kaleidoscope, over whose sparkling surface the sun breaks in infinite rainbows. You are ankle deep in such chips as I'll warrant you never saw from any other woodpile. What do you think of chips from a tree that are red, moss agate and amethyst, and smoky topaz, and agate of every hue? Such are the marvelous splinters that cover the ground for miles here around the huge prostrate trunks—some of them five feet through—from which time's patient ax has hewn them. I broke a specimen from the heart of a tree there years ago which had around the pitch a remarkable array of large and exquisite crystals; for one side of the specimen, which is not so large as my hand, is a beautiful mass of crystals of royal purple amethyst, and on the other an equally beautiful array of smoky topaz crystals. One can get also magnificent cross sections of a whole trunk so thin as to be portable and showing every vein and "year ring," and even the bark. There is not a chip on all those miles which is not worthy a place, just as it is, in the proudest cabinet and, when polished, I know no other rock so splendid. It is one of the hardest stones in the world, and takes and keeps an incomparable polish.

Assaults Upon Health

Are frequently committed by people who dose themselves with violent purgatives. Nothing but ultimate injury can be reasonably expected from such medicines, and yet, upon the smallest occasion, many unwise people use them repeatedly. If the bowels are costive, the most efficacious laxative is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which never convulses and gripes the intestines, while it thoroughly regulates them and insures healthful action of the liver, stomach and kidneys. Use it in rheumatism and malaria.

American oysters are to be planted in the Caribbean sea by an English syndicate. The coast of Jamaica is to be first utilized.

The Stock Growers Journal

Takes great pleasure in chronicling a kind and charitable act on the part of a great corporation. The old saying that corporations are bodies without souls seems to be away off in this instance. Mrs. George Blanck of Miles City has recently received the sum of $500 from the Burlington road. It will be remembered that her husband was killed last fall when going East in charge of cattle for the Phillips company. President Scott, of the Stockgrowers' association, and H. R. Phillips investigated the circumstances attending the death of Mr. Blanck and found the railroad company was not liable, as there was contributory negligence on the part of the deceased. However, in consideration of Mrs. Blanck's straightened circumstances, the Burlington, while recognizing no liability, gave her, through charitable motives solely, the above mentioned sum. Such benevolence deserves to be chronicled, and it should incite other corporations to like deeds of benevolence.

THERE'S A SHOCK to your system, with the usual pill. And there's weakness afterward, and caused by it. How can you expect any lasting benefit from such things?

The nearest to Nature's own way is with Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. In every derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels—Sick and Bilious Headaches, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks—they promptly relieve and permanently cure. No disturbance, no griping, no reaction afterward. They regulate the system perfectly—one tiny, sugar-coated Pellet is a gentle laxative or corrective—three for a cathartic.

They're the smallest, the easiest to take—and the cheapest pill you can buy, for they're guaranteed to give satisfaction or your money is returned. You pay only for the good you get.

Buy of reliable dealers. With tricky ones, something else that pays them better will probably be offered as "just as good." Perhaps it is, for them; but it can't be, for you.

REMARKABLE GROWTH.

FROM 10,000 TO 1,000,000 IN TEN YEARS.

Substantial Evidence of Public Appreciation—Rapid Extension of a Business Founded on Merit—When Newspaper Advertising Is Valuable.

The mark of public appreciation which best indicates the meritorious character of an article for public use is the evidence shown by the necessity of enlargement of business facilities connected with the production of the article. The Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co., located at New Haven, Conn., owning and manufacturing from the original formulas of the Kickapoo Indians the famous medicines of that celebrated tribe, have found it necessary to make a substantial enlargement of their factory by the purchase of a six-story brick building, containing about thirty thousand square feet of floor space, for conducting the enormous and still increasing business of supplying their remedies to the public. This growth has all been within the past ten years; and this is the third time the Kickapoo Indian Medicine Co. have outgrown their quarters since the first introduction of the Kickapoo Remedies among the white people. Their business has grown in a ratio of one to a hundred; or, in other words, they are now doing annually one hundred times the amount of business they did the first year.

Merit a Necessary Basis.

The success resulted mainly from the intrinsic merit of the Kickapoo Remedies; since their introduction was largely attained with comparatively little or no advertising, and that principally consisting of parties of Indians with their interpreters traveling from town to town erecting their camps and showing the people just what the Kickapoo Remedies were, and their use.

It was only within the past two years that the Kickapoo Remedies have been advertised in the newspapers, and then only at first in certain sections after their sale had been established, so as to keep the merits of the Kickapoo Remedies before the people. This newspaper advertising, however, has been of much benefit to the sale of these famous medicines, and has been largely instrumental in effecting the need of additional facilities. Many people who were not reached before are now using the Kickapoo Indian Remedies, and some really astonishing cures have been wrought by these simple compounds of roots, barks and herbs.

When Newspaper Advertising Pays.

Healy & Bigelow, the agents for the Kickapoo Indian Medicine Company, appreciate and endorse most heartily the value of the newspaper advertising for a meritorious article, and say: "We find that newspaper readers are very discriminating, and inclined to be skeptical at first, but after you have established confidence in your goods and the people find that your statements are reliable then your business is bound to increase and extend."

The Kickapoo Remedies consist of only five articles, all of which are purely the product of roots, barks, gums, leaves and flowers. They are absolutely free from mineral or other deleterious substances, as attested to after a chemical analysis by R. H. Crittenden, professor of Physiological Chemistry at Yale college.

Kickapoo Indian Sagwa is a blood, liver and stomach remedy. Kickapoo Indian Oil is a quick cure for all pains, stiffness, soreness, rheumatism and the like. Kickapoo Indian Cough Cure, as its name implies, is for throat and lung difficulties. Kickapoo Indian Salve is an excellent remedy for cuts, wounds, sores, eczema, etc., and Kickapoo Indian Worm Killer is a harmless and absolutely certain remedy for those troubles so frequently met with among children, viz.: Seat, pin and stomach worms. The Sagwa retails for one dollar a bottle; the Cough Cure fifty cents; and the other remedies at twenty-five cents a bottle or package.

There is probably not a drug store in the United States to-day where the Kickapoo remedies are not obtainable, and we are pleased to say that Messrs. Healy & Bigelow have published in this paper, and will continue doing so, some really marvelous cures effected by the Kickapoo Indian Remedies and also unimpeachable evidence of the absolute vegetable purity of these simple, yet effectual compounds, that, as some one has said, bring "Long Life and Good Health."

IN MIDWAY PLAISANCE.

THE MOST INSTRUCTIVE FEATURE OF THE FAIR.

More Can Be Learned of the Ways and Customs of Different Nationalities Than in a Trip to Europe—The Ferris Wheel a Triumph of American Ingenuity.

Jackson Park, Special Correspondence—Midway Plaisance is now particularly the center of attraction to visitors to the world's fair. Here the crowds are always the largest and the fun the most furious of any part of the exposition grounds. Americans, above all things, like to be amused, and this heterogeneous collection of peoples from all over the world furnish amusement as well as instruction to those who examine into their mode of living. It is possible for a visitor to gain more information in the Midway Plaisance about the human family than he could acquire in months and even years of travel. An intelligent Englishman, who might be classed with the element known as "bog trotters," remarked to me the other day as we were gazing at a group of Egyptians that any intelligent person could learn more of the ways of foreign peoples in Midway in a week than he could in two years of travel in the Orient, because their distinctive customs were brought out strongly in their encampments here. The Plaisance is a world of peoples, gathered into a small space and preserving their native characteristics with strict fidelity. The reader, however, can only imagine the picturesqueness of such a scene and how intensely interesting it is to an American who surpasses all nationalities in the traits of curiosity and the desire to learn. In my first visit to the Plaisance I looked to find something which would set forth to the public the idea of the greatness and other characteristics of America, and I certainly found that it was there in the shape of one of the greatest triumphs of modern engineering. One of the South American commissioners at the world's fair lamented in a published interview that the United States, unlike France, had not a distinguishing feature, similar to the Eifel at Paris to set off the great triumphs of the exposition. This was before the Ferris wheel was completed, which, like that great achievement of French engineering, furnishes a destructive work that greets the eye of the visitor for many miles before the towers and minarets of the great white city burst upon his view like an enchanted vision. This feat of American engineering skill demonstrates the genius, courage and enterprise of G. W. G. Ferris, who undertook to show the world what American skill could do without the aid of emoluments of the Columbian exposition behind him.

I have but to mention the dimensions of that gigantic achievement of mechanical engineering to clearly show what a vast undertaking was the feat of constructing the great Ferris wheel. It stands 264 feet high. The diameter of the wheel proper is 250 feet. The main shaft, upon which it revolves as smooth and frictionless as the piston rod of some massive engine, is 33 inches in diameter and 45 1-2 feet in length—the largest steel shaft ever forged. Upon the periphery of the outer circle of the wheel is suspended thirty-six commodious passenger coaches, thirteen feet wide and twenty-six feet long. Each of these coaches has a carrying capacity for sixty passengers, with forty chairs for those who may wish to sit down—many preferring to stand in order to catch every aspect of the magnificent view afforded. These thirty-six cars can, therefore carry 2,180 persons around each trip. The structure weighs 2,100 tons, and requires the power of two 1,000 horse-power engines to rotate it upon its axis, while the whole massive superstructure is raised fifteen feet above the earth upon pyramidal towers of gigantic size, that the great wheel may sweep gracefully on its axis through the air. The towers are each 140 feet high, 40 by 50 feet at the base and six feet square at the top, and each rests upon four square concrete foundations.

The wheel itself consists of a wheel within a wheel. The inner wheel is bounded by a peciphery, which has a diameter of 40 feet less than the outer wheel, or in other words, the peciphery of the inner wheel is 20 feet within that of the outer wheel. These wheels are connected by heavy rods and struts. The outer wheel, which is over 1,060 feet in length, has a double parallel peciphery, and the passenger coaches are hung to the outer peciphery of the big wheel by steel bars 6 1-2 inches in diameter, extending across from one parallel peciphery to the other. The great hub is 16 feet in diameter, between which and the outer pecipheries is arranged all the massive truss work that holds the gigantic structure together. Steel rods 2 9-16 inches in thickness run out from the hub, connecting it with the circumference at every thirteen feet of space, measured upon the circumference. Every possible provision is made for safety, although the giant wheel is moved so slowly that it requires 20 minutes to make one revolution.

The wheel is fitted with a gigantic air brake which will stop it in any position at a moment's notice. The outer line of the wheel contains immense gear cogs, and these mesh with the sprocket chain which revolves around the immense cog wheels and thus the easy, steady, graceful movement is attained. The passenger coaches are adjusted to always remain perfectly level, no matter in what position the wheel may be.

The sensation experienced in riding around the Ferris wheel is very novel and must be experienced to ever be appreciated. One sees the earth slowly receding from his sight as he ascends heavenward, and the view from the top of the wheel is one never to be forgotten. The spectator is at the highest possible point, capable of being reached in the great city of Chicago, without even the effort of climbing, and the beautiful White City with its wealth of architectural and landscape grandeur is spread out before him like an enchanted vision from the Arabian Knights. Great Chicago with its teeming factories and green boulevards, charming residences and rank forests of chimneys, is seen as by a bird in its flight. In descending, the peculiar experience is observed of having the earth come up to meet you. This sensational feeling can only be obtained in one other way—by those who live to tell of the emotion of descending in a balloon.

So wonderfully has this wheel and its experiences worked itself into the lives of the people of Chicago that the common saying, that a man has a wheel in his head, has been changed into the emphatic statement that the man has a Ferris wheel in his cranium.

Under the personal supervision of Mr. Ferris this great structure was commenced last March amid the jeerings of all the doubters and pharisees in the land, and triumphantly completed under showers of encomiums last May. Thus in three months did American genius accomplish a greater achievement in many respects than the Eiffel tower, which required three years in its erection and completion.

STATUE OF ALEXANDER HAMILTON.

A Bronze Figure Which Will Be Unveiled in Brooklyn Next October.

William Ordway Partridge, the well known sculptor, was commissioned two years ago by the Hamilton club of Brooklyn to model a statue of Alexander Hamilton. The handsome work of art arrived from Paris a few days ago, and in October will be unveiled at the intersection of Clinton and Remsen streets, at the corner of the clubhouse site. The figure is of bronze, is eight feet in height, and represents Hamilton making his world-famed speech at Poughkeepsie in favor of the declaration of independence. The pedestal on which the figure will stand is of pink granite and is ten feet high. The idea of having a statue of Alexander Hamilton originated in the club over three years ago, says the New York World. It was talked over at the meetings for months prior to awarding the commission. Mr. Partridge, the sculptor, was consulted. He selected the important event in the history of Hamilton which the statue represents and then made a plaster cast of the subject. The contract provided that the statue was to cost $10,000, and was to be completed in eighteen months. Mr. Partridge went to Paris immediately after the contract was closed and entered into negotiations with a well known firm for the cast. The first time set for the unveiling of the statue was June 1, and, as it did not arrive, many of the members became much worried at the delay until Mr. Partridge showed the art committee a letter explaining that the delay was due to a misunderstanding with the Paris agents about the time of shipment.

French Politeness.

During the recent meeting of the French and English ships at New York, the following story, illustrative of old-time marine manners, was related, strangely enough, by a French officer:

An English admiral who was once visiting a French flag-ship, laid down his quid on a convenient bulkhead before entering the officers' quarters. When he came out again, he was astonished to find the quid in the place where he had left it.

"Pooh!" said he, in the hearing of some of the sailors, "you Frenchmen will never be true sea-dogs. No English blue-jacket, now, would ever have let an admiral's quid alone."

Whereupon one of the French sailors stepped up, touched his cap, and said: "Beg pardon, admiral; I was chewing your quid while you were in there, but I put it back, you know, when I heard you coming out!"

An Indian Romance.

The Dowager Maharanee of Mysore, who recently died, had a remarkable career. While scarcely 10 years of age she insisted on sharing all her younger brother's studies, and in five years she mastered Sanskrit, Canares and Marathi, while not neglecting music, drawing and needlework. When 16 she was chosen as the fourth bride of the late Maharaja, who was a petty official, was summoned to the court to answer for the short revenue of his village. Only when ordered to be whipped was it discovered who he was. He was forgiven, the marriage was celebrated on the first lucky day and the young queen's benign influence was at once and thenceforth felt in the affairs of the state.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Unnecessary.

Mrs. Henderson has a family of nine children, and the skeleton in her house is in the shape of a stocking-basket which is never empty.

With this spectre before her eyes she said playfully, in response to a question from her maid-of-all-work as to what she supposed would be the duties required in the next world:

"Well, for one thing I am quite sure we shan't have to darn stockings after 10 at night, Bridget."

"Shure an' that's thrue for you, ma'am," replied the sympathetic Bridget, "for all the pictures av angels that iver I saw was barefutted."

Too Long a Story.

Boy—I see you got a sign out, "Boy Wanted."

Merchant—Yes; we want a boy to run errands, assist in the packing department, help sweep, conduct customers to the various departments, clean windows, tend door, and——"

Boy—Never mind the rest, mister; I'm looking for a place, and I ain't got time to wait.—Good News.

Neighborly Managing.

Mr. Suburb—Well, we won't be troubled any more with those youngsters of Mr. Nextdoor's racing over our garden. Mr. Nextdoor is going to put a high board fence between the properties.

Mrs. S.—That's lovely. But how did you persuade him to do it?

Mr. S.—I got a friend of mine to suggest to him that a high board fence would keep us from stealing his vegetables.—Good News.

FORTUNES IN SONGS.

"After the Ball" Will Bring Its Composer $100,000.

A Pittsburg Dispatch representative was told the following recently: "Harris, the composer of 'After the Ball,' will make over $100,000 out of his song before it gets through its run," said a music dealer yesterday. "I know this for a certainty, for I have figured with him on the matter. Harris, unlike many other composers, realizes that the only way to make money—is for the composer to publish it himself. He learned from the experince of others. The composers of 'Listen to My Tale of Woe' and 'The Song That Touched My Heart' would have been wealthy men on these productions alone if they had had the foresight to take out copyrights in their own names. Take an instance in Pittsburg. In 1868 Henry Kleber composed a piano piece, 'The Rainbow Schottische,' and gave it to a publisher who agreed to pay a royalty. The piece had a great run—and it is running well yet. Instead of receiving $300 a year royalty as he has every year since the publication, Mr. Kleber might have made his fortune on this little piece. Harris produced a copy of 'After the Ball' for 4 cents. He makes 15 cents clear on each copy sold to music dealers. He makes no reduction in the price if you took 100,000. He realizes the people will buy and knows that once a song is popular a few cents means nothing to the public. He therefore raised the retail price 10 cents above that of any other similar song."

SUMMER SHOES.

Adjure Patent Leathers and Be Comfortable in Russet.

Discard black kid for the summer and luxuriate in russet. Black patent leather shoes are absolutely air proof, and after you have worn a pair for a few hours your sensations of heat and discomfort are very trying. Even ordinary black kid and leather are by no means so porous as russet and not nearly so soft, says the New York World.

When your feet are encased in a well fitting pair of russet shoes you are ready for a tramp, a row, a ride or anything that offers. You know what coolness is. You can walk as many miles as you please without being disagreeably reminded of the existence of your feet.

Not only are they easy, but they are also pretty. They come in all shades, from light tan to an almost mahogany shade. They come in every conceivable style, as common sensible as the most ardent reformer could desire, and gay enough for a Parisian. Some of them boast of black patent leather tips, side pieces and tongues, which gives them a certain air of distinction which plain russet lacks.

And not only are they comfortable and pretty. They are cheap as well! Even the elegant ones adorned with patent leather, hand-sewed and altogether desirable, are only $2.47. And they may be purchased in varying degrees of plainness for smaller sums.

Plucky Boy Soldier.

In the recollections of "A Man of Letters Under the Empire and the Restoration," a story is told of a French poet, Marquis de Saint-Marc, which would do credit to some of the military heroes of history.

When Saint-Marc was fifteen years old he was ensign of a troop of cavalry in the French army, and took part in the battle of Fontenoy. The first charge of the English columns scattered and overthrew the first line of Saint-Marc's regiment, and the boy seated on his horse and unharmed, was left alone.

"In that terrible moment," he said, speaking of it afterward, "I remembered nothing except that I had been told not to flinch, and always to hold my standard upright. I did that with all my strength. Then the second line rushed forward. Before I quite understood it I was urrounded with friends, who wrapped me up in my flag and carried me to Louis XV., who embraced me and made a lieutenant then and there."

A Warning to Inventors.

An ingenious man recently constructed a safe which he declared to be absolutely burglar-proof. To convince the incredulous of the fact he placed a £100 note in his pocket, had himself locked in the safe, with a liberal supply of provisions, and the key cast into the river, declaring that he would give the money to the man who unfastened the door.

All the blacksmiths, and carpenters, and burglars in the town have been boring, and blasting, and beating at that safe for a week with every kind of tool and explosive mixture known to science, and the man is in there yet. He has whispered through the keyhole that he will make the reward £500 if somebody will only let him out.

He has convinced everybody that it is the safest safe ever invented. Fears are entertained that the whole concern will have to be melted down in the furnace before he is released, and efforts are to be made to pass in through the keyhole a fire-proof jacket, to protect the inventor while the iron is melting.—Tit-Bits.

A Caution.

The Union Signal, the organ of the Woman's Christian Temperance union, warns all young women and girls anxious to "pay their way" to the world's fair by securing employment in Chicago to be on their guard against tempting advertisements for "help."

It appears that agents and purveyors for certain infamous establishments in that city are sending out their lures, either under the head of "Wanted" in the public press or by private circulars, and directing applicants to certain "intelligence offices" or "employment bureaus," which are simply traps for the ignorant.

To insure safety and honorable treatment, young girls seeking situations are cautioned to pay no heed to these advertisements, but to apply directly to the Bureau of the Columbian Association of Housekeepers, the employment agency of the Young Woman's Christian Association, or that of Hull House, which last is a free bureau.

A Question of Probability.

"How are you getting along with your new novel?" he asked of a feminine genius.

"Not so well," she answered, "as I have been. I came to a very troublesome point last week, and I haven't done anything on it since."

"What was the matter?"

"I find my heroine all alone. She takes her hat and goes out into the darkness and loneliness in search of the village lawyer."

"That sounds very good."

"Yes, but it is improbable."

"Why?"

"She is all alone."

"Of course."

"And puts her hat on to go out."

"Yes."

"Whom is she going to ask whether it is on straight or not?"—Washington Star.

Transmitting Pictures by Electricity.

The telectroscope is an instrument suggested by M. Leon le Pontois for the purpose of transmitting pictures or views of moving or stationary objects to long distances. The sensitiveness of selinium to light is well known, and this quality is utilized in M. le Pontois' invention. The transmitter is a selinium cell upon which the light from the object falls after modification by a rotating perforated disk. The little shower of rays is converted into a procession of momentary currents which pass along to the receiver. The receiver is a gas chamber, the valve of which is regulated by incoming currents of electricity, and thus a calcium light of greater or less intensity is produced.

The Champion Dirty Man.

Texas can boast of a champion dirty man. A regular boarder at the hostelrie of the Widow Flapjack in Austin said to the new white waiter.

"What has become of the colored man who used to wait on me?"

"I'm the man," was the reply. "Mrs. Flapjack made me wash my hands and face yesterday."

TIPS HER HAT LIKE A MAN

The Latest Fad of the Ultra-Fashionable Young New York Girl.

At the beginning of the straw hat season in New York a Fifth avenue belle, while walking down Broadway one afternoon, surprised a male acquaintance by lifting her broad-brimmed sun shade in exact imitation of his salute. This was the inauguration of a fad which has become somewhat common, and a Journal reporter says that the younger female members of the 400 are generally taking it up. The new-style straw hat makes hat-tipping a simple matter, as it can generally be worn without pins or other fastener. On windy days a military salute is the proper acknowledgement of a male friend's salute.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

THE FINANCIAL QUESTION DEALT WITH AT LENGTH.

The Sherman Law Must Be Repealed Says the President—The People Demand a Sound and Stable Currency—Tariff Reform Will Come Later.

Washington, Aug. 8.—The president's message was delivered to congress as soon as the two bodies were called together at noon. Its reading was proceeded with. It is as follows:

To the Congress of the United States: The existence of an alarming, an extraordinary business situation, involving the welfare and prosperity of all our people, has constrained me to call together in extra session the people's representatives in congress, to the end that through a wise and patriotic exercise of the legislative duty with which they solely are charged, present evils may be mitigated and dangers threatening the future may be averted.

Our Unfortunate Financial Plight

is not the results of untoward events nor of conditions related to our natural resources; nor is it traceable to any of the afflictions which frequently check national growth and prosperity. With plenteous crops, with abundant promise of remunerative production and manufacture; with unusual invitations to safe investment with satisfactory assurances to business enterprise, suddenly financial distrust and fear have sprung upon every side. Numerous moneyed institutions have suspended because their abundant assets were not immediately available to meet the demands of frightened depositors; surviving corporations and individuals are too content to keep in hand the money they are usually anxious to loan, and those engaged in legitimate business are surprised to find that the securities they offered for loans, though heretofore satisfactory, are no longer accepted. Values supposed to be fixed are fast becoming conjectural, and loss and failure have invaded every branch of business. I believe these things are principally chargeable to congressional legislation touching the purchase and coinage of silver by the general government.

This legislation is embodied in a statute passed on the 14th day of July, 1890, which was the culmination of much agitation on the subject involved, and which may be considered a truce after the long struggle between the advocates of free silver coinage and those intending to be more conservative.

Undoubtedly the monthly purchases by the government of 4,500,000 ounces of silver forced under that statute were regarded by those interested in silver production as a certain guaranty of its increase in price. The result, however, has been entirely different, for immediately following a spasmodic and slight rise the price of silver began to fall after the passage of the act and has since reached the lowest point ever known. This disappointing result has led to renewed and persistent effort in the direction of free silver coinage.

Meanwhile, not only are the evil effects of the operation of the present law constantly accumulating, but the result to which its execution must inevitably lead is becoming palpable to all who give the least heed to financial subjects.

This law provides that in payment of the 4,500,000 ounces of silver bullion which the secretary of the treasury is commanded to purchase monthly, there shall be issued treasury notes, redeemable, on demand, in gold or silver coin, at the discretion of the secretary of the treasury, and that the said notes may be reissued. It is, however, declared in the act to be "the established policy of the United States to maintain the two meals upon a parity with each other upon the leprtesraletrngn,oioelvirnnsr0dx upon the present legal ratio, or such ratio as may be provided by law."

This declaration so controls the action of the secretary of the treasury as to prevent his exercising the discretion nominally vested in him, if by such action the parity between gold and silver may be disturbed. Manifestly a refusal by the secretary to pay these treasury notes in gold, if demanded, would necessarily and depreciation as obligations payable only in silver, and would destroy the parity between the two metals by establishing a discrimination in favor of gold.

Up to the 15th day of July, 1893, these notes had been issued in payment of silver bullion purchased to the amount of more than one hundred and forty seven millions of dollars. While all but a very small quantity of this bullion remains uncoined and without usefulness in the treasury, many of the notes given in its purchase have been paid in gold. This is illustrated by the statement that between the 1st day of May, 1892, and the 15th day of July, 1893, the notes of this kind issued in payment for silver bullion amounted to a little more than $54,000,000, and that during the same period about $49,000,000 were paid by the treasury in gold for the redemption of such notes.

The policy necessarily adopted of paying these notes in gold has not spared the gold reserve of $100,000,000 long ago set aside by the government for the redemption of other notes, for this fund has already been subjected to the payment of new obligations amounting to about $150,000,000 on account of silver purchases, and has as a consequence, for the first time since its creation, been encroached upon. We have thus made the depletion of our gold easy, and have tempted other and more appreciative nations to add it to their stock. That the opportunity we have afforded has not been neglected is shown by the large amounts of gold which have been recently drawn from our treasury and exported to increase the financial strength of foreign nations. The excess of exports of gold over its imports for the year ending June 30, 1893, amounted to over $87,500,000. Between the 1st day of July, 1890, and the 15th day of July, 1893, the gold coin and bullion in our treasury decreased more than $132,000,000, while during the same period the silver coin and bullion in the treasury increased more than $147,000,000. Unless government bonds are to be constantly issued and sold to replenish our exhausted gold, only to be again exhausted, it is apparent that the operation of the silver-purchase law now in force leads in the direction of the entire substitution of silver for gold in the government treasury and that this must be followed by the payment of all government obligations in depreciated silver.

Gold and Silver Must Part Company and the government must fail in its established policy to maintain the two metals on a parity of each other. Given over to the exclusive use of a currency greatly depreciated according to the standard of the commercial world we could no longer claim a place among the nations of the first class, nor could our government claim a performance of its obligation, so far as such an obligation has been imposed upon it, to provide for the use of the people the best and safest money. If, as many of it friends claim, silver ought to occupy a higher place in our currency and the currency of the world through general and agreement, it is obvious that the United States will not be in a position to gain a hearing in favor of such an arrangement so long as we are willing to continue our attempt to accomplish the result single-handed.

International Co-operation

The knowledge in business circles among our own people that our government cannot make its fiat equivalent to intrinsic value, nor keep inferior money on a parity with superior money, by its own independent efforts has resulted in such a lack of confidence at home, in the stability of currency values, that capital refuses its aid to new enterprises, while millions are actually withdrawn from the channels of trade and commerce to become idle and unproductive in the hands of their timid owners. Foreign investors, equally alert, not only decline to purchase American securities, but make haste to sacrifice those which they already have. It does not meet the situation to say that the apprehension in regard to the future of our finances is groundless, and that there is no reason for lack of confidence in the purposes or power of the government in the premises. The very existence of this apprehension and lack of confidence, however caused, which ought not for a moment to be disregarded. Possibly if the undertaking we have in hand were the maintainance of a specific, known quantity of silver at a parity with gold, our ability to do so might be estimated and gauged, and, perhaps, in view of our unparalled growth and resources, might be favorably passed upon. But when our avowed endeavor is to maintain such parity in regard to an amount of silver increasing at the rate of $50,000,000 yearly, with no fixed termination to such increase, it can hardly be said that a problem is presented whose solution is free from doubt.

Is a Menace.

The people of the United tates are entitled to a Sound and Stable Currency

and to money recognized as such on every exchange and in every market in the world. Their government has no right to injure them by financial experiments opposed to the policy and practice of other civilized states, nor is it justified in permitting an exaggerated and unreasonable reliance on our national strength and ability to jeopardize the soundness of the people's money. This matter rises above the plane of party politics. It vitally concerns every business and calling and enters every household in the land. There is one important aspect of the subject which especially should never be overlooked.

Laboring Man the Sufferer.

At times like the present, when the evils of unsound finance threaten us, the speculator may anticipate a harvest gathered from the misfortunes of others, the capitalist may protect himself by hoarding or may even find profit in the fluctuationof values; but the wage-earner, the first to be injured by a depreciated currency and the last to receive the benefits of its correction, is practically defenseless. He relies for work upon the ventures of confident and contented capital. This failing him his condition is without alleviation, for he can neither prey on the misfortunes of others nor hoard his labor. One of the greatest statesmen our country has known, speaking more than fifty years ago when a derangement of the currency had caused commercial distress, said:

"The very man of all others who has the deepest interest in a sound currency and who suffers by mischievous legislation in monetary matters, is the man who earns his daily bread by his daily toil."

These words are as pertinent now as on the day they were uttered and ought to impressively remind us that a failure in the discharge of our duty at this time must especially injure those of our countrymen who labor, and who, because of their number and condition, are entitled to the most watchful care of their government. It is of the utmost imporance that such relief as congress can afford in the existing situation be afforded at once. The maxim, "He gives twice who gives quickly" is directly applicable. It may be true that the embarrassment from which the country is suffering arises as much from evils apprehended as from those actually existing. We may hope, too, that calm counsels will prevail, and that neither the capitalist nor the wage earner will give way to unreasoning panic and sacrifice their property or their interests under the influence of exaggerated fears. Nevertheless, every day's delay in removing one of the present state of things enlarges the mischief already done and increases the responsibility of the government for its existence. Whatever the people have a right to expect from congress, they may certainly demand thatlegislation, condemned by the ordeal of three years disastrous experience, shall be removed from the statute books as soon as their representatives can legitimately deal with it. It was my purpose to summon congress in special session early in the coming September that we might enter promptly upon the work of tariff reform which the true interests of the counry clearly demand, which so large a majority of the people as shown by their suffrages desire and expect, and to the accomplishment of which every effort of the present administration is pledged. But while tariff reform has lost nothing of its immediate and permanent importance; and must in the near future engage the attention of congress, it has seemed to me that the financial condition of the country should at once and before all other subjects, be considered by your honorable body.

I earnestly recommend the prompt repeal of the provisions of the act passed July 14, 1890, authorizing the purchase of silver bullion and that other legislative action may be put beyond all doubt or mistake the intention and the ability of the government to fulfill its pecuniary obligations in money universally recognized by all civilized countries.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

Executive Mansion, Aug. 7, 1893.

ODD FORMS OF LOVE MAKING.

The Way Courting Is Carried on Among the Insect Tribes.

Courting among insects is often a very elaborate affair, says the Boston Globe. A male spider will approach a female and amuse her for some time with his antics. It is said that he twirls around and around, crosses his legs, erects his body, and exercises a sort of mazy dance to excite her admiration.

She is a very vicious lady, and not always pleased with his love making; sometimes he finds himself obliged to ward her off, for she has a painful mode of showing her displeasure, and if she entirely disapproves of his attentions will fall upon him and rend him to pieces.

One species of spider is said to have a novel way of making love, the sexes communicating by means of strands of web stretching from one retreat to the other—a sort of telephone, so to speak.

Glow worms, according to some naturalists, use their luminaries as love signals. The females of one species seat themselves among the grass, while the males, attracted by the light, dance attendance around them.

Concerning fishes the sticklebacks occasionally resort to harsh treatment, attacking the females with open mouths and erected spines. As husbands their behavior is certainly eccentric, for after the female has deposited her eggs within the nest that he has prepared for her, her lord and master drives her away and proceeds to hatch them himself.

FIRE IN MINNEAPOLIS

LUMBER YARDS, FACTORIES AND RESIDENCES BURNED.

The Loss Amounts to Two Million Dollars and Fifteen Hundred People Are Homeless—Several Lives Probably Lost.

Minneapolis, Aug. 14.—Two million dollars' worth of property went up in flames yesterday. Over 200 houses are burned and at least 1,500 persons are rendered homeless. It was a little after 1:30 o'clock when the watchman saw a small blaze on the river side of J. B. Clarke & Co.'s box factory on the south end of Nicollet island at the head of St. Anthony falls. An alarm, quickly followed by a second and third, was turned in, but by the time the department arrived the flames, fanned by a furious south wind, had gained such headway that all the firemen could do was to turn their attention to adjoining property. Nearly all the structures in this vicinity were of wood, dry as tinder, and made splendid fuel for the flames. Clarke's box factory was doomed before even a stream of water was thrown upon it. Next to it on the north was Lenhart's wagon works and the Cedar Lake ice houses, which were wiped out of existence. Further north were Lintges & Connell's boiler works, and here the heaviest loss on the island took place. This firm had a stock valued at over $50,000 and not a cent of insurance. The other losers are fairly well insured. While this fire was at its height a spark carried high in the air alighted on Boom island, nearly half a mile away above the fire on Nicollet avenue. This island is occupied as a wood yard by the lumber firm of Nelson, Tenney & Co. No one noticed the spark fall, but the whole island was soon ablaze. It was this spark that caused the greatest loss. Quickly jumping across the small space of water separating the island from the mainland the flames gained a footing in Nelson, Tenney & Co.'s lumber yard, where there were piled some 10,000,000 feet of lumber. The fire worked through this yard and into that of E. W. Backus & Co., adjoining. Beyond the lumber yard were the two mills belonging to E. W. Backus & Co. Of these nothing remain except the smoke stacks and a mass of twisted machinery and charred timbers. J. B. Chattenton's cedar post mill went the way of the others, as did the sash and door factories of Fulton & Libbey and J. F. Wilcox & Co. At the corner of Marshall street and Thirteenth avenue northeast stood the mammoth brewery of the Minneapolis Brewing company. This, it seemed, must surely go, but at this time the wind changed, and, although the brewery was surrounded by wooden buildings, it was saved, and this was the only structure between Sixth avenue and Thirteenth avenue northeast, and from the river back to Marshall street, a distance of three blocks, that escaped the fire.

The change in the direction of the wind imperiled the lumber yards and mills on the west side of the river, and they were almost at the mercy of the flying sparks and embers. The firemen were powerless to render any assistance, for to reach the Plymouth or Twentieth avenue north bridges it would have been necessary to pass through a furnace. The bridges, too, were on fire, and there was nothing to do but hope for the best until some apparatus could make a detour of three miles and reach the fire. The employes in the yards, however, had not been idle. They stretched lines of hose, and any spark that found a footing across the river was promptly squelched. Along the east bank of the river were located the mills and lumber yards which were burned, while east of them were located many stores and residences. Most of them were wooden structures, and generally occupied by the employes of the mills and laboring men. Large numbers saved their household effects which they stacked in piles over which they stood guard to prevent their being carried away by thieves. About 6 o'clock the fire jumped the river and for some time the west side saw mill district was in danger. Fortunately the flames were extinguished before much damage was done.

Hundreds of people were either the recipients of charity or slept in the open air last night. Many saved only the clothes on their backs.

It is next to impossible to estimate the loss. The owners of the property themselves in many cases are unable to give any estimates. Nelson, Tenney & Co. lose about 10,000,000 feet of lumber and some wood; Backus & Co., two saw mills and probably a like amount of lumber. Their loss will probably be $250,000. A. G. Wilcox & Co.'s loss is about $100,000, and Fulton & Libbey's about the same. The bottling works and stables of the Minneapolis Brewing company are burned and the loss will be about $300,000. All were well insured. On the small buildings the loss can be only estimated. There are probably 200 small buildings burned, together with their contents. The damage to Clarke's box factory is estimated at $50,000; insured.

Thomas Salone, seventy years of age, fell dead from heart disease, caused by excitement. Several firemen were slightly injured.

It is reported that several lives were lost, but the rumors have not been verified. The body of a boy was found in the debris. Several firemen were injured, but not fatally.

DENSE FOG.

London, Aug. 14.—A dense fog covered the English channel all Saturday night and up to noon Sunday. Such a phenomenon in the month of August is almost normal. Fog whistles ashore and afloat were kept going incessantly. The steamboat Ville de Derours, plying between Dover and Ostend, collided with an unknown steamer to-day. The unseen vessel disappeared immediately from sight, and it is believed she was not seriously damaged.

As it stands at present both the Repeblicans and Democrats stand pat on the assertion that the repeal of the silver bill is all that is needed to bring back good times. We hope that they will do it quickly and then we will see if they are right or wrong. If it does not do as they claim the People's party will clearly have the inside.

Harvest is being rapidly completed. Many farmers have already finished cutting their wheat although some have hardly commenced, Reports are so conflicting that it is almost impossible to predict what the yield will be. Some farmers claim they will have a first class crop while others report a very poor yield. It will probably be an average yield but the extraordinary low price is not encouraging.

Congress has done nothing so far and President Cleveland has gone fishing again. He has however, left word that any congressman who votes for free silver cannot expect any federal patronage for his constituents. Cleveland is trying hard to serve his masters, the money kings.

This is the time of the year that laborers expect good wages to commence but it looks bad for them this year. The Great Northern last week cut all of their laborers to $1.00 per day, Men were never so plentiful at this time of the year and those who expect to work during harvest and threshing will find the poorest wages ever given in this part of the state.

When flies become troublesome in a house they can always be expelled by a very simple mixture. A half tea-spoonful of black pepper finely ground should be mixed with double the quantity of brown sugar and the compound be moistened with cream. About the biggest piece of stupidity and jackassism that has been proposed on the American continent in some time, is to take up a collection for that Spanish dude—the Duke of Veragua, Those philanthropic people who are inclined to remember the decendant of Columbus in his hour of adversity, will do well to remember that before another spring rolls around there will be, probably, a good many calls upon their generosity to keep their neighbors supplied with bread and fuel. The American people will do well to look after their own people who have no work to earn money to support their families and let the Spaniards do the same.—West St. Paul Times.

According to my view of the subject, the conspiracy which seems to have been formed here and in Europe to destroy by legislation and otherwise from three-sevenths to one-half the metallic money of the world is the most gigantic crime of this or any other age. The consummation of such a scheme would ultimately entail more misery upon the human race than all the wars, pestilence and famine that ever occurred in the history of the world. The absolute and instantaneous destruction of half the entire movable property of the world, including houses ships, railroads and all other appliances for carrying on commerce, while it would be felt more sensibly at the same moment, would not produce anything like the prolonged distress and disorganization of society that must inevitably result from the permanent annihilation of one-half the metallic money in the world."—John G. Carlisle, (Cleveland's Secretary of the Treasury) in the house of representatives in 1878.

Whatever the farmer may think of his condition ordinarily in the financial stringency now prevailing he is to be envied. While banks are closing and business houses suspending he is secure and free from such annoyances. He has no anxieties about house rent, provisions fuel, or the perplexities that are the constant annoyance of the average business man and mechanic. His home is secure, his sustance assured, and he has every reason to feel contented and happy. Surely the farmer, in those times, has every reason to be envied.—Mankato Review.

Oh no! The farmer has no care for any of the necessities enumerated. He plants a chin and grows a house. While it grows he puts his family under a bush. Broiled quail fly around and roasted pigs trot about from farm to farm offering samples of choice rib and ham. Here in the Red River Valley the farmer need not worry for clothing neither. Under our tropical December sun his children going to school feel comfortable wearing a smile of contentment and a leaf from a school book that was fashionable last year. Once in a while in midwinter the farmer who lives fifteen miles from the little town where he sells his wheat for 40 cents a bushel, pays his taxes, gets another extension on the mortgage due last year meets to answer to the summons of N. N, who does business there or where the doctor resides who charges $1.00 for each mile traveled and one or two miles additional and makes him pay for his medicine—once in a while we say, when he has to attend to these matters or go to the woods 10 miles away he is a little worried when caught in a blizzard but then he is used to hardship and rather likes it. His home is secure unless he has a mortgage spread over it and most of them have Chinch bug, army worm, frit fly, hail and frost may destroy his crops, but he has every reason to feel contented and happy. Surely the farmers should be envied. They are millionaries and gentlemen of leisure most of them.—Norman County Herald.

If Cleveland really believed what he said last fall about the tariff being the paramount issue then the old chump has found out that he did not know what he was talking about for he now knows and admits in his message, that the tariff is of no consequence whatever. He has given up the tariff and pretends to believe that too much silver purchasing is what ails the country. We would rise to enquire of the precious old liar or fool, we don't know which to call him, what ails Australia or England and all the other countries where they don't buy any silver at all? What is the matter with the people is 20 per cent interest and a big bonus, exhorbitant freight and passenger rates, thieving express and robber telegraph companies, infamous land monopolists who are driving the poor from off the face of the earth, heartless landlords who are collecting rack rents, these and a thousand other steals which are being perpatrated on the masses by the classes are what is the matter with the nation, and Cleveland's message suggests as little remedy for these evils which afflict the country, as could be found in the braying of a jack ass.—Crookston Tribune.

Some years ago [illegible] at Constantinople [illegible] a distinguished party [illegible] after the disappearance of the cornstalks, when the soothing cigar shed its benign influence around them and helped them or impeded digestion beneath their respective diaphragms, the conversation, which had been desultory, turned upon the discipline maintained in the several forces represented.

"Well, where are the cigars?"

"[illegible] has not yet discovered his slippers."

A roar of laughter greeted this reply, and [illegible] immediate [illegible] bastinado for the unfortunate Ali.—Tit-Bits.

One on the Boy.

"Change a nickel for me?" asked the newsboy with the freckled face, climbing on the platform.

"Yes," said the street car conductor, "hand it over."

The boy handed him the coin, the official put it in his pocket, gave him 2 cents in return and [illegible] half fare [illegible]

"Where's de t'ree cents?" demanded the boy.

"The 3 cents is all right, sonny."

"But I didn't want to ride."

"What did you get on for?"

"I wanted to get de change for a customer."

"That's all right," said the conductor, [illegible] change, and [illegible] paid your fare. You can stay on [illegible]"

The boy, with [illegible] in his eyes that made him [illegible] the car at that [illegible] got off and ran back.

Most Likely.

A young man and a young woman lean over the front gate. They are lovers. It is moonlight. He is loath to leave, as the parting is the last. He is about to go away. She is reluctant to see him depart. They swing on the gate.

"I'll never forget you," he says, "and if death should claim me my last thought will be of you."

"I'll be true to you," she sobs. "I'll never see anybody else or love them as long as I live."

They parted. Six years later he returns. His sweetheart of former years is married. They meet at a ball. She has changed greatly. Between the dances the recognition takes place.

"Let me see," he muses, with her fan beating a tattoo upon her pretty hand, "was it you or your brother who was my old sweetheart?"

"Really, I don't know," he says. "Probably my father."—Tit-Bits.

"You are on your wedding trip, you say, madame?"

"Yes, monsieur."

"You have friends in the south, then?"

"Oh, no, monsieur; we took this route, mon mari and I, because of the tunnels!"—From the French.

THE SHRUG.

A Language of Signs Much Used by Latin Races.

There is a language which is not written, spoken, taught or learned, and yet is current when words are useless to convey intensity of meaning or delicacy of thought. The language, for such it is, may be found in use in almost every part of the world. Its varied significance is comprehended by the rich and its meaning understood by the poor. This peculiar medium of communication has no vocabulary, fixed rules of grammar or logical terms. For brevity it is unsurpassed. In point of perspicuity it stands without an equal. It is the shrug.

The shrug is used for expressing a multitude of things, both objectively and subjectively. It is, as circumstances require, a noun, adverb, pronoun, adjective, preposition, conjunction, interjection or verb. The sphere of its usefulness is almost limitless.

A curious happening occurred in the West end a little more than a year ago. A certain man came home quite late one dark night without his key; he accordingly had to ring the bell to summon his wife to open the door. As the hour was late, his wife wished to know who the individual was before she unlocked the house, so she called out from the window:

"Who's there?"

The man, not thinking of the darkness, gave an off-hand shrug, which ordinarily would be interpreted as meaning, "Your husband, of course!"

Not receiving an answer to her inquiry, she became somewhat suspicious, and asked again, in accents—not mild:

"Who's at the door?"

The idea of his wife asking him who he was so disturbed his even temper of mind that he again failed to "grasp the situation," and from mere force of habit he stood there with outstretched arms, raised shoulders and pouting lips—the imprimatur of dismay. His thoughts and feelings, as expressed by his gesture, might be transcribed in the vernacular as: "She talks! She talks!"

An interregnum of silence followed, and the window was closed.

In a moment the man realized the situation. He was locked out of his own house. Looked upon as a suspicious character and liable to arrest—all on account of a shrug.

The study of the shrug will be found of intense interest and peculiarly fascinating. It embodies so much in a little. It is a gesture full of as much meaning as a page of oratory, as precise as a geometrical conclusion, and as diverse of usage as a philosophical argument.—Boston Courier.

Single-Handed.

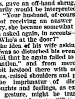
A good story of Gen. John C. Breckenridge is said to have been told by himself, with evident relish, not long before his death. In talking to some friends about the many kindnesses which had been shown him by his people and the pleasant things which had been said to him, he remarked that he estimated as highly as any compliment he had ever received one which an old Kentucky farmer paid him during the war, which had come to his ears only a short time before.

It was the custom in war-time, as it has always been at all times, for the country people to come into the county town on Saturday afternoon to exchange news gathered during the week.

At one of these gatherings in a store in Richmond, Ky., just after the battle of Chickamauga, one of the men said he had heard some grand news. Upon being pressed to tell it, he said, gravely:

"I did hear that thar has been a most powerful fight down in Tennessee, and they says that for a long time it went mighty agin our folks, but that then Mr. Brackinridge come forrard and asked the privilege of the field for just fifteen minutes, and they do say that he slew thirty thousand!"

Which statement was received with due respect by the assembled company, although it appeared to occasion a slight ripple of surprise, much to the narrator's satisfaction.



WHERE FLESH IS NEEDED, and the system's weakened, you should take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. After "the Grip," for instance, or in convalescence from pneumonia, fevers, or other wasting diseases, nothing can equal it as an appetizing, restorative tonic to bring back health and vigor. For pale, puny, scrofulous children, it does wonders. It builds up both their flesh and their strength, thoroughly purifies the blood, and makes effective every natural means of cleansing, repairing, and nourishing the system.

It starts the torpid liver into healthy action and promotes all the bodily functions.

For the most stubborn Scrofulous, Skin, and Scalp Diseases, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, and kindred ailments, the "Discovery" is the only remedy that's guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, you have your money back.

A Law of Evolution.

It is a suggestive fact always sufficiently considered that as soon as any organ or faculty falls into disuse it degenerates and is finally lost altogether. Through all the ages that man has had the power of speech this power has not been fixed in us in any degree whatever by heredity. It is regarded as definitely proved that if a child of civilized parents were brought up in a desert place and allowed no communication whatever with man it would never make any attempt at speech. Up to the last century it was not uncommon to find persons living in a wild state in the woods and forests of England, France, Germany and Russia, who were utterly incapable of speech, though they could make sounds in imitation of the cries of wild animals. Certain parasite insects have so completly degenerated that they possess neither eyes, legs, heads, mouths, stomachs nor intestines. Animals that burrow and live under groud lose the power of sight, or have eyes that are merely rudimentary. Slave ants and working ants have lost their wings through being kept entirely to a life on the ground. The masters in some colonies of ants in which slaves are kept have become so hopelessly dependent on their slaves that they not only will not seek food, but are incapable of feeding themselves, and will starve with food in front of thme unless a slave is present to place it in their jaws.Leisure Hours.

HOW HE FOUND HER.

"My dear Harold," said Lawyer Bellamy, "as a lifelong friend, you will permit me to say that you are wasting time."

Harold Hastings laughed.

"I cannot help it," he said. "It is impossible for me to do otherwise. I cannot fall in love to order. And it strikes me that my good uncle's will is the most absurd document in existence."

"It is a most singular will, certainly," said Mr. Bellamy. "He leaves you his property—and a fine one it is, too—provided that before the arrival of your twenty-fifth birthday you have chosen a wife. She is to be younger than yourself and of good family. These facts being proven, you will take possession of your fortune on your wedding day.

"His reasons he told me and told you, though he has not had them written down. He would not place his estate in the hands of a man without family. And those Hastings who have not been married at twenty-five have never been married at all. He, himself, outlived wife, son and daughters.

"'Three of my brothers remained bachelors and went to the dogs,' he said to me. 'Harold's father had but one child. I wish the name to be perpetuated. I do not want the Hastings state to be divided amongst Smiths and Browns. If Harold does not do as I wish I shall found a charity, to be called the Hastings hospital.'"

"My uncle had a right to do as he pleased with his own," said Harold. "But I have had four years in which to seek for a wife and have not found one yet. I will not marry a woman unless I love her, and not one of them all makes my heart throb faster. It does not seem to me that the constant presence of a woman in a man's home can be anything but a trial.

"In fact, I think marriage is a mistake. I can flirt for an evening with a girl, and never wish to see her again. And wives are exacting—they desire perpetual admiration and attention. I should make mine miserable, I am sure. The next three months will not be apt to change my opinion on the subject—so much the better for the Hastings hospital."

"You are a foolish fellow to give up lifelong ease and comfort for such an absurd opinion," said Mr. Bellamy. "As for the wife, give her all the money she wants, and you'll have no trouble. Her time will be taken up with her jewels, her finery and her entertainments."

"How I should hate such a woman," said young Hastings—and with a laugh and a gay good-bye, caught up his hat and was off.

It was only a common little room, high up in a plain boarding house, to which Harold Hastings betook himself, when his daily tasks were over, but there he found his books, his violin and quiet.

Hither he fled after an evening spent in society endeavoring to enjoy himself.

To men, Harold always knew what to say. They liked him, and he liked them, but the conventional young lady was his detestation.

A bold woman disgusted him; a bashful girl made him as bashful as herself in ten minutes.

He neither would nor could dance, and never paid a compliment to a lady in his life.

Being handsome and well connected, people always asked him to their affairs, and always complained afterward that he did not do his duty, and as he had said, the hospital was likely to have his uncle's money, and he to keep on his hand to hand struggle with the world and die a bachelor.

"Give me freedom," he said, as he sat down beside his table with his book and his cigar. "I will never be a slave to any woman's whims and fancies."

Soon the room was full of the blue smoke which delighted him. His favorite author (best of friends) particularly pleased him. The invitation to a debutante's coming out party stood staring at him from the mantel-piece, unregarded. And the hours wore on until the hands of the clock in the church tower, visible from his window, both pointed upward, and the sounds of footsteps in the street below grew few and far between. Then he arose, and extinguishing his light, threw his window wide open and sat down beside it.

All the other windows in the street were dark, save one in a flat house directly opposite. Here a lamp burned upon a table and near it sat a young girl, busy with her needle.

The fabric on which she was at work was delicate, pink satin, and she seemed to be trimming it with ruffles of muslin.

The girl herself was fair; her hair was drawn into a classical knot at the back of her head and fastened with a silver pin. Her dress was a pale-blue muslin.

The girl, with her creamy complexion, the pale blue of her dress, the faint rose pink of the satin, the yellow circle of light from the lamp, formed a picture which attracted Harold as no Italian virante had ever done before, though he often haunted art galleries for hours.

After staring at it for awhile, he sought his fieldglass and, with this help, watched his opposite neighbor.

"The sweetest face I ever saw!" he declared, sotto voce. "A veritable Greuze."

Half an hour had passed, yet he was not weary of looking. Then a voice in the street attracted his attention. An intoxicated man ran against a sober pedestrian and an altercation ensued, the drunkard asserting that he was insulted. As his voice arose the girl laid down her work, and coming to the window leaned far out. She seemed to watch the men intently and pressed one small hand to her bosom, as if in alarm.

In a moment more the sober citizen went on his way, and the drunken man began to ascend the stairs of the flat house, and, having unlocked it, left it open behind him. The girl took the light and for a moment or so the room was dark. Then she returned and resumed her seat and her sewing.

Still Harold Hastings watched her. In a little while he saw the man approach the table; he seemed to speak angrily to the girl; he menaced her with his fist and she shrunk from him; then he struck her. Her scream reached Harold's ear. She fell, the lamp toppled over, and the room was filled with the red light of flame.

In less time than it takes to tell it, Harold had rushed down stairs, across the street and in at the door the man had left open behind him. As he ran up stairs he uttered the cry of fire, and heard the people rush to the doors of their apartments; his own steps, however, did not pause until he reached the upper floor and had dashed into the room in which the catastrophe had occurred, with its scorched walls and odor of kerosene. The flames were climbing up the curtains and the walls.

The girl lay senseless on the floor. The drunkard was making futile efforts to extinguish the flames with a broom, and the blazing fragments of muslin were dropping down on the carpet.

Harold's first act was to lift the poor girl from the floor and carry her into the open air.

The fire was a small one, and the janitor and several other men, besides a stalwart policeman, had arrived and the fire engines had been summoned.

He was not needed on the premises, and all his thoughts were for the pretty creature in his arms.

The streets were crowded; he could not keep her there, and his first thought was to carry her to his own boarding house.

The landlady, a kind old soul, came down stairs in a wrapper and nightcap and lit the light in her parlor.

A neighboring doctor was summoned, and he found that, though the girl was not burned, her right arm was broken.

When at last she opened her eyes she told a pitiful tale.

The drunkard was her step-father. Since her mother's death the daughter had worked to support him, by making fancy articles for the shops. On these she was busy when he entered the house and began to abuse her.

"And now he has broken my arm and I shall be able to do nothing for a long while," she said. "I shall starve and so will he."

"Oh, no, they'll take you to the hospital, dear," the landlady said. "Mr. Hastings will send for an ambulance."

"I will do no such thing," said Harold. "You have a spare room, Mrs. Fletcher. We will have this young lady taken there."

He whispered something in Mrs. Fletcher's ear, which made her smile and whisper back:

"Well, if you can afford it."

In fact he had engaged the room.

The part of Good Samaritan was new to him, but he played it perfectly, Mrs. Fletcher helping him.

That good lady went over to the little flat next day, to get the girl's clothing.

The step-father had gone off to finish his spree, the janitor had locked up his rooms, and the other tenants were demanding the expulsion of the disorderly tenant of the agent, who seemed very ready to comply with their request when he heard of the girl's accident.

"You see, she paid the rent," he said. "I'd never have let it to the step-father. But Miss Holden is a nice, honest girl, and a lady."

So Mrs. Fletcher collected all that seemed peculiarly women's property, and had the trunk taken to Miss Holden's room, where for weeks she nursed her faithfully.

The injury had been a bad one, and the doctor's prophecies were alarming. But in time the patient began to recover.

Meanwhile, Harold had found himself compelled to practice strict economy in order to meet the expenses he had taken upon himself. He did not regret it. And as the girl grew better, and was able to read the books he brought her, and take pleasure in the flowers, for which he sacrificed his cigars, a certain happiness came into his life that he had never experienced before.

His parents had departed this life so early, that he could scarcely remember having a home. And now it seemed so much like coming home when he entered the room where the invalid now sat amongst cushions. And kind Mrs. Fletcher smiled upon him with a gentle approval of his conduct.

One day she had news to tell him. The dissipated step-father was dead. He had been found lying in the street and arrested—in the morning he was dead.

"She has been crying over him, poor dear!" said Mrs. Fletcher. "He didn't deserve a tear, but it's better to feel soft than hard, any way."

A little after he went to her.

"My mother was fond of him once," was all she said. "He might have been very different but for that terrible habit of his. I am quite alone now."

"At least you have a friend," he said, taking her hand. As he did so, little thrills ran through him. He experienced unknown emotions. Then the girl cried out:

"Oh, indeed, I have a good, kind friend in you! How can I ever thank you or dear Mrs. Fletcher? I am under obligations so great I can never hope to repay them."

He did not know how to answer her. He took her little hand again. How sweet she was, how gentle, he thought.

"Do you know," he whispered, "that I should not ask any greater happiness than to pet you always."

He had simply intended to state a fact, to utter the thought in his heart. He had not known what that thought meant. But as her face flushed crimson and her eyes drooped beneath his own, he understood.

"I love you, Helen," he cried, telling himself, even as he did so, that he was an idiot.

"Hullo, Harold," cried Mr. Bellamy, as they met in the street a month later, "am I to understand that you have so effectually forgotten your uncle's fortune for the sake of single blessedness?"

"My uncle's fortune!" cried Harold, stopping short. "Hanged if I hadn't forgotten how the time was flying."

"You've only a week left," said the lawyer. "Harold, what have you been doing with yourself?"

"Marrying a wife," said Harold. "I have just returned from my wedding trip."

Arab Horsemanship.

The Arab, when he is a horseman, is a superb one, even though he does not come within our canons of the art. When the horse is only a means of transportation, or a beast of burden, the Arab is no better than his like elsewhere. When, as in the desert, the horse is his pet, his companion, his dream by day and night, the Arab is in a sense incomparable. No horse is more [illegible]. No dog is more intelligent than the dark, liquid-eyed steed he has bred and trained, whose ancestor, a hundred generations back, his ancestors have loved and trusted. This horse—would that we human beings had not been civilized out of so many of our animal qualities!—will follow him day and night. He would fret out of his soul at being hitched to a post, and yet he will stand immovable in the midst of danger and fright which would make any civilized horse frantic. He will carry his master through fire and water. He will unflinchingly face wounds and death, so long as the hand which has fed him is [illegible] to seek it. He will kneel for him to mount, and he will bear him bravely home, if he falls a sacrifice [illegible]. These are not always fables. The horse, treated as he should be generation after generation, develops a rare intelligence, and has as noble an affection as the dog. But, as above said, even in Arabia, this horse is [illegible] of great price. Thrice happy the [illegible]

LARIAT BETTER THAN PISTOL.

A Nevada Duel in Which One Combatant Was Dragged to Death.

A unique and terrible duel was fought recently on Dunphy's cattle ranch, near Carlin, Nev., says the San Francisco Examiner. George Rice and Westly Hickerson, two cowboys, were the principals, both having been friends for some time. During the evening Rice and Hickerson began playing pranks on one another. Hickerson went to Rice's bunk, took his pistol, and threw it into a stream running close by. Thereupon Rice swung his lasso and caught Hickerson, declaring he would drag him into the creek and hold him there until he found the pistol. He was prevailed upon by his companions, however, to release Hickerson. He then said he would quit work and leave the ranch. He and Hickerson sat down together to figure up how much money they had borrowed from or loaned to each other at different times and to settle up. This matter was adjusted amicably and they agreed to call it all square, and Rice mounted his horse to ride into town, for the purpose of seeing the foreman and to notify him of his intention to leave his service and receive what was due him.

He had covered perhaps half the distance to town, when, for some reason, he wheeled his horse and started back toward the camp. It is presumed he had thought the matter over and concluded not to quit work. Hickerson saw him coming, when, without a word to his companions, he mounted his horse and started out to meet Rice. They advanced until within about fifty yards of each other, when Hickerson pulled his revolver and commenced firing. Rice leaned over on the opposite side of his horse, Indian fashion, and began circling around Hickerson, at the same time undoing his lasso, and kept gradually drawing nearer to Hickerson. Hickerson had fired three times at his opponent, but owing to Rice's maneuvers, had failed to hit either horse or rider. In the meantime Rice had drawn close enough to his assailant. He straightened up in his saddle, whirled his lariat around his head, and in a second the lariat had settled around his victim's body, and Rice was wildly dashing toward the camp, dragging his now helpless man over the rocks and through the sagebrush. The men in the camp were horror-stricken at the sight, and before they could rush to the assistance of the poor fellow Rice had reached camp. It was but the work of a moment to undo the lasso, and it took but a glance at the bruised and battered face of the unfortunate young man to tell that life was extinct. Rice, however, could not believe that his victim was dead, and wanted to ride into town for a doctor, but one of the cowboys said the best thing to do was to send for the foreman and the sheriff.

Rice said: "If you are going to send for that gang I think I will be making myself scarce around these parts." He immediately put spurs to his horse and shouted as he started: "I am going to the Red house, boys, and you can find me there."

As soon as the news of the tragedy was received deputy sheriffs started for the scene of the killing and the Red House ranch. They returned, saying Rice had not been near the Red house and that no trace of him could be found.

The jury returned a verdict that Hickerson's death was caused by being dragged by a lariat in the hands of George Rice. They neither exonerated nor blamed Rice.

WEDGED IN A SEWER PIPE.

A Game of Hide-and-Seek Which Nearly Resulted Fatally to a Little Girl.

A little girl while at play was wedged in a sewer pipe the other evening, and while suffering intense pain was finally released by the breaking of the crock. For a while, says the Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph, it seemed that the child would lose a limb or perhaps her life. The accident occurred at the corner of Cherry and Main streets, Allegheny, Pa.

Strung along the corner of Cherry street are a number of clay sewer pipes. The pieces are three feet long and ten inches in diameter. About dusk a crowd of children, among them Mamie Kaylor, daughter of Councilman Kaylor of the Fourth ward, were amusing themselves scampering over the pipes. While they were playing "hide-and-seek," little Mamie Kaylor, like the other children, would crawl into the pipes and hide. After the game had proceeded for some time it was noticed by the other children that Mamie was missing. While they were searching for her they heard muffled screams from the interior of one of the sections of pipe. Running to it, Mamie was discovered wedged in. In crawling in she had doubled her leg, and the knee joint and foot became wedged. The other children tried to release the girl by pulling. But their efforts only added to the pain she was enduring as well as to tighten the hold of the pipe. Some men were attracted by the cries and the efforts of the children to release Mamie. They carried the pipe into the saloon of John Dickreeder. Here they tilted the heavy pipe and tried to shake out the little girl, but without success. The child was then fast becoming faint from pain and fright and then it was decided to break the crock. This was a delicate job, for a chance blow might break the child's leg or do more serious damage. It was determined to chip the clay pipe, beginning at the end where the girl's feet were. With a mallet the chipping process began, when suddenly the crock split squarely in half and the child was liberated.

FOUGHT WITH "MEXICAN PISTOLS."

A Deadly Duel in Arizona in Which Stones Were the Weapons Used.

Up in a canon in the mountains of Arizona there occurred a novel duel the other afternoon. Part of the affair is the old story, man and woman. The whole of it is Mexican, both as to the participants and their methods. Juan Valencia's wife is the mother of four children, is not attractive, yet she is the woman in the case. Florentine Samaro, a neighbor, is the man in the case, and is not comely himself. In fact, says a correspondent of the St. Joseph News, the duel did not occur in high life. A few days ago the woman went to a constable and wanted Samaro arrested. The officer referred her to her husband. To Valencia she went, and the injured husband at once looked up Samaro, who was not surprised, but ugly. "Good," said he, "do me the favor to go up the arroyo with me and we will settle the matter up there." Valencia acquiesced.

In the canon alone, armed with what the Mexican constable terms "pistoles Mexicanos" (Mexican pistols), they fought. Mexican pistols are pieces of rock. There were no seconds, no interested friends, no doctor. No one cried "ready! aim, fire," or "one, two, three, shoot!" It was for blood only, this duel. How they fought will never be learned. The only showing is a dead man, his head cut open with an ugly gash on the crown, other portions of it bruised, and a wicked cut over one eye. In the canon may yet be seen one of the "bullets," covered with hair and blood. Its work was as effective as though it was a 44-caliber. The husband was the victor. His tale is that he was walking ahead when Samaro opened the affray by casting the first stone from behind. Valencia recovered quickly and ere long killed his man. He left the dead and returned to his wronged family, saying nothing. Next morning the body was found by neighbor.

Mixtures of Silk and Wool.

Poplins, which has recently been especially successful under the name of bengaline, are among the most elegant and popular silk and wool goods known. By the process of manufacture, the silk is thrown on the surface and the wool is used as a filling, so that the same strain does not come equally upon both materials. This is a far better way to mix silk and wool than where wool is weft and silk the woof. It must be stated as strongly as possible, however, that mixtures are never as desirable as cloth woven of one material. A dress of linen is better than one of silk and linen. A dress of cotton is better than one of wool and cotton, and a dress of pure wool is better than one of silk and wool.—Good Housekeeping.

Electric Lighting in Spain.

Spaniards, although slow in the adoption of many improvements, are decidedly not so in regard to electric lighting. A large number of the principal towns, as well as very many small ones, have installations of their own. The latest venture is on the part of the owner of some water power near the two very limited towns, Elgoibar and Eibar, in the Spanish province of Viscaya; these towns will shortly be supplied with electric current for both lighting and power purposes. The necessary working power will be furnished by the water of the river Deva.

Never buy whisky for medicinal purposes unless you know the bottlers of it to be reliable, as most whiskies sold under celebrated names are spurious, cheap articles, whose bottlers cannot afford to have their names appear on the labels. Uncle Sam's Monogram Whiskey is bottled by the oldest and largest firm in the Liquor line in the Northwest and the factor with which it has been bottled must be proof of its superior quality. The Scenic "Burlington."

The opinion of a prominent foreign journalist about it:

Chicago, Ill., July 24, 1893.—W. J. C. Kenyon, Esq., Gen. Pass. Agent C., B. & N. R. R., St. Paul, Minn.—Dear Sir: Allow me to compliment your company through these lines for the perfect comfort, the beautiful scenery, the smoothness of its road-bed and its great speed, which make traveling on your line one of pleasure of the highest order. I have traveled a good deal for the last year, both in Europe and America, but I do not know that I have ever enjoyed a trip on a railroad more than a recent trip from Minneapolis to La Crosse. The reclining chairs and the well equipped cars are all of the best that I have ever met with. The smoke, dust and dirt, which make traveling a hardship on most roads, are entirely absent on yours. I remain, yours very truly, Dr. Fred Voss Mohn, Representing "Bergens Aftenblad," Bergen, Norway, at Columbian Exposition, Chicago, 1893.

It restored him to perfect health to the great astonishment of his family and friends." John Quibell, Holt, Ont.

Alex Burr, a prominent farmer near the town of Lynd, was thrown from a load of hay and had his neck broken.

A force of men are at work at the Goodhue county almshouse making accommodations for the number of poor which the new law will undoubtedly send there the coming winter.

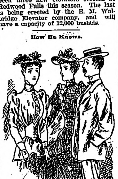
The Merchants' Protective association of St. Cloud by resolution offered C. B. Ridgman a bonus of $10,000 to rebuild the saw mill recently burned. It is understood he will accept the offer.

The Red Wing mills, factories and potteries are for the present all shut down. The sewer pipe factory is still operating with a reduced force. The time has never been known in that city when so many people were out of employment.

Senator Geissel's store at North Prairie was broken in by burglars and a large quantity of goods stolen. The stolen goods were taken away in a wagon. It is thought to be the work of some peddlars who have been hanging around the neighborhood.

Elevator men evidently have confidence in the wheat crop, as there have been three new elevators erected at Redwood Falls this season. The last is being erected by the E. M. Walbridge Elevator company, and will have a capacity of 12,000 bushels.

How He Knows.



"Don't you think everything is cool at out hotel, Mr. Bentley?"

"I'm sure of it. Even the clerk looks at me coldly when I ask him to cash a check."

A Brave Middy.

Amid the instances of heroism, gallantry and pluck of which the catastrophe has given so many examples, none stands out clearer than that of young Lanyon, the little middy who stuck by the admiral to the last. We can fancy the boy standing by the great, burly figure of Sir George, a giant, as Froude somewhere describes him, and the sense of security which his presence must have inspired in the youngster. "You had better jump," the admiral is reported to have said, and sharp came the reply, "I'd rather stay with you, sir." The subject is one worthy of being placed on the walls of the Academy next year.—London World.

A Discouraging Proviso.

Gus De Smith—Well, Tom, I hear you eloped with a rich girl. Was it a success?

Tom Fewscads—Not altogether. Her father telegraphed that he will forgive us if we don't come back.

SHE LEFT HER HUSBAND

MRS. HALL OF LITTLE FALLS ARRESTED IN ST. PAUL.

She Is Charged With Eloping With Her Cousin, Who Is Also Arrested—Mrs. Hall Says Her Husband Knew That She Was Going.

St. Paul, Aug. 19.—Yesterday afternoon Mrs. George Hall and Winfield Cameron of Little Falls, Minn., were brought to the central station by Lieut. Babe, of the central precinct, who found the couple at the home of Mrs. Hall's mother, Mrs. James Palles, 270 Colburn street. The couple were detained on the strength of a telegram from the sheriff of Little Falls, stating that Mrs. Hall and Cameron had eloped from there and were headed for St. Paul. The sheriff requested Chief Garvin to find them if they were in St. Paul, and to detain them here until he could come on and take them back to Little Falls to answer to the charges brought against them by Mrs. Hall's husband.

Mrs. Hall was seen at the central station by a reporter and was not backward about talking, and protested her innocence of eloping with Cameron. From her story it appears that her dream of married bliss was of extremely short duration and not very sweet, either.

"I married my husband one year ago last month," she said, "and in less than two weeks after we were married he began to neglect me. He seemed indifferent, and at last I couldn't stand it any longer, and I told him I was going to leave him and go home to my mother. He told me to go."

Winfield Cameron, with whom it is alleged she eloped from Little Falls, is Mrs. Hall's cousin, and, until recently, was in partnership with her husband in the restaurant business. It seems, however, that Mr. Hall became jealous of what he considered the too marked attention of "Cousin Winfield" to Mrs. Hall, and the partnership was dissolved.

Cameron says he had no intention of eloping with his cousin. "I was going to Dakota to engage in business," he said, "and first had to see an uncle who lives in Minneapolis to draw some money from him which he has in trust for me. It so happened that I decided to come to Minneapolis to-day, and on the train I met Mrs. Hall, and she told me that she had left her husband and was coming to St. Paul to live with her mother. She and her husband did not get along very well together, but so far as eloping with her is concerned I had no such intention. When she said she was going to St. Paul I made up my mind to come through with her, and say good by to her and my aunt, her mother, before I went to Dakota."

FIFTY KILLED.

London, Aug. 19.—The Paris correspondent of the Times says of the fight between French and Italian workingmen in Aigues Mortes yesterday: "At least fifty were killed and 150 were wounded in the fight. The French, numbering 500, carried every kind of weapons from pickaxes and bludgeons to firearms. There were frightful hand-to-hand fights in the streets. Afterwards 500 Italians barricaded themselves on a farm. They were besieged forthwith by the French and a regular battle followed. Whenever an Italian escaped he was hunted like a rat to his death.

ROASTED ALIVE.

Spokane, Wash., Aug. 19.—A Kalispell Indian called "Rain-in-the-Face-Tomcat" arrived yesterday seeking a squaw who eloped with a Spokane Indian named "White Blanket." He found her in the suburbs of the city last night and shot her and scalped her. "White Blanket" and others cornered him, cut off his ears, then built a fire in the center of the track and threw him on it bound. The police arrived too late to save "Tomcat" or catch the murderers. "White Blanket" has taken to the woods.

LINEMAN KILLED.

Eau Claire, Wis., Aug. 19.—The second death this week from contact with electric wires occurred yesterday. Richard Hantzch, a lineman in the employ of the telephone and lighting company, while at the top of a pole received a full incandescent current. With a cry he fell and hung by one foot to the wires, apparently a corpse. Two fellow workmen ran up the pole and tried to lower him with a rope, but he fell, striking on the curbstone. Life was extinct.

FOR EMBEZZLEMENT.

San Angelo, Tex., Aug. 19.—W. B. Buchanan, president of the Sutton County Bank of Sonora and Coke Bank of Robert Lee, which failed last week, was arrested yesterday charged with embezzlement. There is considerable sentiment against Buchanan, as it is claimed that deposits were accepted late Saturday night, Aug. 5, and the following Monday morning notices were posted on the doors announcing their failure. Not a dollar was found in the bank vaults.

FELL INTO A CHASM.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 21.—At Snoqualmie Falls yesterday Prof. F. C. Anderson was advertised to make a parachute jump from the top of Snoqualmie falls into the boiling water beneath. About 1,500 were present to witness it. A wire rope had been stretched seventy-five feet above the falls, and the falls shot down a distance of 260 feet. The parachute shot down rapidly, and was evidently struck by an unlooked for current of air, caused by the motion of the falls, and the aeronaut struck with fearful force on a ledge of rock. Then he dropped about fifty feet, striking another ledge and falling to the bottom. His head was fractured and he sustained internal injuries which the doctors pronounce fatal.

WORK OF WRECKERS.

San Francisco, Aug. 21.—Three attempts were made by unknown persons near Mayfield to wreck trains on the Southern Pacific road. At two points barriers of ties were placed across the track and in the other case rails were used. Fortunately in all these cases the trains encountering the obstructions were freight trains which were running at a slow rate of speed. Had it not been that the night was clear, terrible wrecks could not have been avoided. As it was the engineers succeeded in stopping the trains. It is thought the work was done by tramps.

STEAMER BURNED.

Erie, Pa., Aug. 21. — The steamer Oneida, owned by Davidson of Bay City, was burned in Lake Erie this morning. The vessel was commanded by Capt. T. E. Black, with a crew of nineteen men, and was bound up from Buffalo light. When Capt. Black, after several hours' hard fighting, saw his craft was doomed, he turned her for the American shore where she lies on the beach, about twenty miles from Erie, a total loss. The captain and his crew were driven from the boat several miles out in the lake. The steamer was valued at $5,000.

Early last May young Carrier was a prosperous merchant, but through expensive living was led into the crime for which he is charged. By means of forged bills of lading he converted seventy-five carloads of flour to his own use and fled the country. Altogether he is supposed to have obtained $200,000.

The respite was not granted until the very last moment and great crowds of people from all parts of the nation and of all nationalities came to see the execution.

The bank will lose nothing, as it has a bond for $5,000, signed by the Fidelity Security company of New York.

FIFTY THIRD CONGRESS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS.

Condensed Record of the Business Being Transacted by our National Law-makers—Routine Report Day by Day.

Washington, Aug. 15.—In the Senate Senator Voorhees (Dem. Ind.) introduced a bill authorizing the issue of national bank notes to the full value of the bonds deposited. It was accompanied by a letter from Secretary Carlisle recommending its passage as a measure of immediate relief, and saying it will add $19,000,000 to the circulation. Senator Hill introduced a resolution which lies on the table, declaring it the sense of the senate that nothing but financial legislation shall be undertaken during the present special session. Mr. Vest (Dem. Mo.) called up the resolution offered by him last Tuesday in favor of bimetallism, and the free and unlimited coinage of both gold and silver, and addressed the senate on the subject. The silver discussion in the house was continued in a rather desultory manner, and the attention accorded to it is decidedly listless. Mr. Boatner (Dem. La.) made the initiative speech in favor of free coinage. Mr. Boatner was followed by Mr. Layton (Dem. Ohio) for unconditional repeal, and by Mr. Patterson (Dem. Tenn.) in the same line.

Washington, Aug. 16.—The senate committee on finance, by a practically unanimous vote, decided to report favorably the bill introduced yesterday by Mr. Voorhees providing for the issuing of circulating notes to national banks to the par value of government bonds and deposit to secure circulation. Mr. Voorhees endeavored to put the bill on its passage, but there was an objection and the bill went over for a day. The Lee Mantle case, involving the question of the right of governors of states to appoint senators (under certain circumstances) was taken up and Mr. Hunton (Dem. Va.) addressed the senate in support of Mr. Mantle's right to a seat. The silver debate was resumed in the house, Mr. Hutchison (Dem. Tex.) concluding his remarks begun yesterday in favor of free coinage of silver. Mr. Hutchison was followed by Mr. Blanchard (Dem. La.), who spoke in favor of free coinage.

Washington, Aug. 17.—The morning hour in the senate after the introduction of bills was entirely occupied by a discussion as to the overloading of government buildings in Washington with public books and documents, Mr. Vest (Dem. Mo.) proposing a remedy by the passage of a bill appropriating $300,000 for a building to be known as "the hall of records." Mr. Berry (Dem. Ark.) then addressed the senate in advocacy of the double standard of gold and silver. After adopting a resolution calling on the secretary of the treasury for information respecting silver purchases, the debate on the Wilson bill was resumed, Mr. McCall (Rep. Mass.) speaking for the bill. Mr. McCall was followed by Mr. Combs of New York. Mr. Bryan (Dem. Neb.) followed Mr. Combs and attacked the president's message in vigorous terms. The recommendations of the president meant the burial of silver with no promise of resurrection.

Washington, Aug 18.—After the ordinary routine of morning business in the senate the report on the Montana senatorial case was taken up, and an argument was made by Mr. Pascoe (Dem. Fla.) against the right of Mr. Mantle to his seat under the governor's appointment. After the executive session the senate passed the resolution providing for the payment of their mileage, and as a mark of respect to the late Representative Chipman, adjourned. Mr. Daniels (Rep. N. Y.) opened the day's debate in the house with a speech urging the unconditional repeal of the purchase sections of the Sherman act. Mr. Coldzier (Dem. Ill.) followed in a speech in favor of repeal. At the conclusion of his remarks the death of Representative Chipman was announced by Mr. Weadock of Michigan. The usual resolutions were adopted, and the house, as a mark of respect, adjourned.

Washington, Aug. 19. — The senate committee on finance reported a bill for the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman act, accompanying it by a declaration in favor of bimetallism. The committee was in session only an hour and the only point of contention was over the wording of the bill. A bill had been drawn by Senator Voorhees and was put before the committee in printed form, the text being in accordance with the suggestions of yesterday. The bill thus becomes an original measure, favorably reported, and will probably be known as the Voorhees bill. The votes by which it was reported are those of Chairman Voorhees and Senators McPherson, Morrill, Sherman, Allison and Aldrich—the last four named being Republicans.

A substitute for the bill was reported from the minority of the committee (Messrs. Harris, Vance, Jones of Arkansas, Jones of Nevada, and Vest) fixing the number of grains of silver in United States coins (464.4 grains of pure silver per dollar and proportionately for other silver coins). The bill and substitute were ordered printed and placed on the calendar and Mr. Voorhees gave notice that he should call them up next Tuesday.

The silver debate was continued in both houses.

Yesterday's rain, which was very heavy, has put a stop to harvesting for a couple of days at least. Harvesting has been progressing rapidly the past week and fully three quarters of the wheat has been cut, many farmers having already commenced stacking It is not thought that the rain will do much damage to grain in the shock and it will be a good thing for plowing.

Congress is still pounding away doing nothing and it will probably be several weeks before they attempt to do anything. Speaker Crisp has announced his committees. The south and east get all the places worth having and the west gets—left. Friends of silver get badly the worst of it, Wall Street having evidently captured Speaker Crisp as well as President Cleveland. Wall street is in big luck these days but thousands of idle men are daily marching through the streets of our large cities asking for bread.

My business is that of a money lender and this is the way I prosper: Uncle Sam, as everybody calls him, and I are neighbors, or, rather, I am his tennant. I had been earning some money before the war and shortly after the war when Uncle Sam became temporarily embarrassed I let him have my money and I took his note $1,000 based upon the resources of his large estates and his willingness to pay. In fact I took no risk. The old fellow is immensely rich but he had had some family trouble and it cost him a great deal, so he had to give his note to get money to pay expences. He has been able to pay that note many times since but he keeps an extensive household and though his income is abundant he generally manages to get away with most of it but here comes the best part of my story. I am a favorite with him and he let me have $900 of my money back long ago for which he charges me only 1 per cent interest while he keeps on paying me 4 per cent on my note. The $900 I have been lending to other tenants at as high a rate of interest as I could obtain and it has been a very profitable business for me but the old fellow is still hard up and is talking of borrowing more money. If he was a good manager he would not have to be hard up. He might have insisted upon having the $900 indorsed upon my note as well as not and saved interest. Or he could have let the other tenants who are harder up than I, had that money and saved them much interest. But he is just as favorable towards me as ever I am at present trying to induce him to let me use the balance due me and retain my note and I think he will do it. You see the other tenants need more money and he knows I will lend it to them if he gives it to me. I tell you it is everything to stand in with Uncle Sam. The only thing that I am afraid of is that the fellows who are always hard up for money may kick over the traces and get things changed one of these days but I take good care that none but my friends have anything to do with his affairs so I am probably safe yet for some time, I had rather live in the same country with Uncle Sam than anywhere else on earth. He may not be just to his other tennants all the time but what do I care as long as it is money in my pocket.

National Banker.

From: Norman County Herald.

We are told the amount of money in circulation in the country is sufficient and at the same time we are told that if the national banks are permitted to issue bank notes to the full amount of bonds deposited the increased circulation will help us in our financial trouble We are told there is plenty of money and at the same time the government is busy preparing bills for the national banks that have taken advantage of the low price of bonds to obtain a basis for increased circulation, We are told there is plenty of money and still the banks in the east are creating a circulating medium of their own by issuing certified checks which pass as money Oh no, the truth of the matter is that there is not money enough and that's what scared what little there is out of the market too. The financial doctors say we do not need much money in this country because checks, drafts, bills of exchange, etc. are used so extensively. It does not relieve a dollar from use. Before a businessman can draw a check or obtain a draft he must have the cold cash to draw on and so it goes from man to man—the money presented by such paper is tied up until called for and the circulating medium is neither increased or diminished by the use of checks and drafts.—Norman County Herald.

Food was never cheaper than to-day but still appeals are being sent out from the large cities asking for aid for working men who cannot obtain enough work to keep their families from starving. We are told in this part of the country that the reason for the low price of farm products is that we have an over production. Over production and people starving. Surely something is radically wrong, Who is responsible? The republicans say the democrats and the democrats say the republicans. We say both. The present administration has adopted precisely the same policies as the former. Democrats instead of republicans holding the offices is the only differance up to date.

Rev James Moody will be married at Moorhead to-day to Miss Augusta W. Johnson of Sandborn N. D. Rev Moody has been in charge of the Swedish Lutheran Church at this place and Black River for the past five years and enjoys the confidence and respect of all. Who unite in wishing the newly wedded pair a prosperous life. We understand that they will be at home at St. Hilaire after Sept 1 st.

Minneapolis wheat men are trying to figure out a plan to buy our wheat this fall with a very small amount of cash. It is claimed that there is not money enough in the country to move the crop. Last year the man who said that we did not have money enough in this country was termed a crank, now when they want the wheat and are short of money it is different.

Our "sound money" friends should elucidate the advantages of a National bank system which creates an interest hearing debt for the sole purposed of incresing our circulating medium. What better are National banks bills than green-backs? They are not money, or legal tender. They have no intrinsic value and their only security is the governments promise to pay.

The news leaked out last Tuesday that Miss Emma Thomas and Dan McLaughlin were quietly married in Chicago on the 8th of this month The most intimate friends of the couple were not surprised as far as the announcement of the marrage was concerned, it was secrecy that caught them, and it was complete in every respect. Both bride and groom are too well known in Ada to allow us the pleasure, for a pleasure it is, of referring to the good qualities possessed by Mr. McLaughlin and his bride They are to be congratulated and among the many good wishes received by the happy couple from their friends, the INDEX kindly hopes to be remembered as one of most earnest in—"a bon voyage."—Norman County Index.

The Northern Pacific Railroad company was chartered by act of congress July 2, 1864. The road was foreclosed in August, 1875, and was reoganized Sept, 2?, 1875, so by to-day's action for the second time in its history it passes into the hands of receivers. It owns and controls a mileage of 5,562 miles, including the Wisconsin Central and the Seattle: Lake Shore & Eastern, which it controls with the Canadian Pacific. Its capital stock is $49,000,000 common and $36,237,850 preferred stock. It has paid dividends on its preferred stocks as follows in 1883 11 per cent; nothing in 1884 to 1889 inclusive: in 1890 and 1891 4 per cent; in 1892, 1 per cent in January and 1 per cent in April, and nothing since then The fundeddebt of the system is $84,?54,000. Its floating debt of $9,385,5??, was supposed to have been provided for recently by a syndicate which subscribed for $12,000,000 collateral trust notes, of which 60 per cents, so officials have claimed, has been paid.

The railroad section men employed at this point, and probably all along the line, also, are now working for one dollar a day and boarding themselves. This is equivalent to about 60 cents a day and board. In South Dakota men are working in the harvest fields for their board This is the report from the vicinity of Yankton and Sioux Falls and it appears to be reliable. Farmers about Crookston have secured good men from Duluth for the fall work for a dollar and a dollar and a quarter a day. Wages have in the fields are ranging from a dollar and a quarter to as low as seventy five cents it is reported. If prices of grain remain at the present point farmers cannot afford to pay more.—Marshall County Leader.

A NICE GAME.

The Children Enjoyed It, but Their Aunt Found It Rather Tiresome.

The listener does not know whether or not to believe this story, which comes to him from the country about some city children. It sets forth that old Mrs. Hayrick, who lives on a farm, was receiving a visit from her little nephew and niece, Johnny and Mary Peters, from Boston. They played merrily enough out of doors, but presently there came a very stormy day when they were not permitted to play even in the barn. Mrs. Hayrick thought that the children would be hard to amuse, but they announced at once their intention to play "papa and mamma" in the dining room and seemed to enjoy the anticipation of it very much. Their aunt watched them through the kitchen door. They arranged themselves on opposite sides of a small work table whereon Mary had placed some dishes and began to play that they were eating dinner.

"These potatoes are a little raw," said Johnny presently.

"I don't think so," answered Mary archly.

"And now that I've mentioned it the beefsteak is pretty badly overdone," Johnny went on.

"William, how can you!" exclaimed Mary.

"I suppose you think it's good enough for me," said Johnny.

"It's too good, that what's I think, for such a brute!"

"And what put it into your head to mix the bread with vinegar?"

"I didn't."

"Who did, then?"

"You mean, mean thing."

And Mary, setting down a cup with so much violence that her aunt feared it would break, rose and rushed out of the room. Both children seemed to regard the game of "papa and mamma" as very good pastime, but their aunt found it rather tragical.—Boston Transcript.

He Got Away.

The tall, aged, sad looking man ate a bountiful dinner at the restaurant, and then with a check calling for 75 cents made his way to the cashier's desk. He banged down the check with a battered silver dollar and looked sadder than ever.

The cashier picked up the dollar and examined it suspiciously. It had a deep dent on one side, and looked as though it had been plugged. At that moment the customer spoke: "It is very painful for me to part with that dollar. It saved my life once, however, and must do so again. At the siege of Vicksburg I carried it in my vest pocket, and the dent you see there was made by a bullet, which otherwise would have killed me. I have kept it since as a memorial, and it well nigh breaks my heart to let it go, but I must—I have nothing else."

The cashier was plainly interested. "In what year was the siege of Vicksburg?" he asked.

"Sixty-three," said the sad man promptly.

"And this dollar," returned the cashier, "is dated 187, and is a counterfeit."

The sad man looked annoyed. "Of course it is," he replied. "How could I have an 1877 dollar in 1863 if it wasn't a counterfeit?"

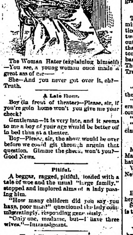
And the cashier was so dumfounded that he passed out a quarter in change and allowed the sad man to escape.—Harper's Magazine.

A Parrot Story.

A lady who had bought a parrot of a bird fancier was shocked afterward to discover that the parrot was addicted to the pernicious habit of "exaggerated colloquialisms." The lady at once took the bird back and complained, requesting him to refund her money. The man refused, saying it was quite easy to cure the parrot. He then told her the next time the parrot offended to take it out of the cage, grasp it by the tail and swing it violently round her head several times. It was not long before the parrot raised the lady's ire by a string of choice expressions, and the lady proceeded to "take it out" of the bird. After swinging it round her head till she was tired she laid the parrot on the table. The bird got up, and shaking his feathers together quietly remarked:

"By thunder, what a gale!"—Tit-Bits.

Calling Him Down.



The Woman Hater (explaining himself)—You see, a young woman once made a great ass of me—

She—And you never got over it, eh?—Truth.

A Late Hour.

Boy (in front of theater)—Please, sir, if you're goin home won't you give me your check?

Gentleman—It is very late, and it seems to me a boy of your age would be better off in bed than at a theater.

Boy—Please, sir, the show would be over before we could git through arguin that question. Gimme the check, won't you?—Good News.

Pitiful.

A beggar, ragged, pitiful, loaded with a tale of woe and the usual "large family," stopped and implored alms of a lady passing him.

"How many children did you say you have, poor man?" questioned the lady commiseratingly, responding generously.

"Only one, madame, but—I have three wives."—Intransigeant.

Worse Than the Scarlet Fever.

"When your practicing friend across the way has learned to play the cornet, he will entertain the whole neighborhood," said Mrs. Brown.

"Yes," said Mrs. Jones. "But by that time there won't be any neighborhood here."—Texas Siftings.

Staving Him Off.

Willis—He never fails to give me a cigar to smoke when I call on him.

Wallace—He must be afraid you will smoke one of your own.—Brooklyn Life.

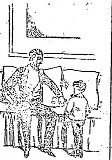
As It Was in 1853.

"So you enjoyed your European trip, did you?" inquired the simple old gentleman. "I haven't been over since 1853, but my recollections are still vivid. I remember once standing upon Mont Blanc watching the sun sink to rest behind the blue waters of the Mediterranean, while to my right the noble Rhine rushed onward to the Black sea, and the Pyrenees, still holding the snows of winter, were on my left. I remember while standing there"—

"But, Mr. Gray," feebly interrupted his listener, "I was on Mont Blanc myself, and really, you'll excuse me, but you really must be mistaken in your geography."

"I?" returned the old man lightly. "Not a bit of it, but I forget, its different now. You know, my dear boy, that since my day the entire map of Europe has been changed by these awful wars, and so of course you can't appreciate what it was in 1853."—Harper's Magazine.

The Young Idea Shoots.



The Sister's Beau—So, Johnny, you're going to be a chemist, like papa, eh? And did you know this diamond of mine was the same substance as charcoal?

Johnny—No.

The Sister's Beau—And hasn't papa told you that?

Johnny—No. He said it was paste.—Life.

Nickel In the Slot.

"Help! Help!" Loud and clear this cry of distress rang through the rotunda of the Administration building early this morning, startling the sleepy guard who sat in a darkened corner.

He listened intently. Without he heard the shuffle of the feet of the first workmen on the gravel walk. The hum in his head gradually increased, lulling him into peaceful slumber, and in his imagination he was just arresting a visitor who had asked him where the Manufactures building was, when the cry for help again rang out and brought the guard to his feet.

He tiptoed to the door, and standing within its shadow he listened.

Suddenly from without the door came a moan, followed by another. The guard rushed out of the door and there beheld, to his surprise, a young man, the shape of whose head and the cut of whose clothes proclaimed him to be of the species "dude."

"Who called for help?" demanded the guard.

"I did," the dude said.

"What is the matter?" asked the guard.

"Woe is me," the dude moaned, looking at the slot in the machine. "I came this morning and unthinkingly dropped a nickel in this slot, which requires only a cent. Please help me to get back 4 cents."—Chicago Record.

Wanted More Faith.

A clergyman who was settled some years ago in a southern town was in great favor with the colored brethren and was frequently called upon to "sit in council" with the members of one of their churches in a neighboring town.

Among these members was an old darky, with grizzled hair, who had in a high degree the gift for "responses" so much cultivated by the people of his color. He was always ready with "Amen!" and more than ready with "Glory!" but his particular fondness was for the fervent ejaculation, "De Lord gib us more faith!"

On one occasion, when the clergyman in question had been called upon to discourse to this congregation, he illustrated his "practical talk" with the story of an occurrence which he had himself witnessed not long before. As he finished it he said earnestly:

"Now, my brethren, you would hardly believe, would you, that any man could have witnessed such a scene as that almost at your very doors?"

As he paused, there came a tremendous groan from the old darky, and with great fervor he ejaculated, "De Lord gib us more faith!"—Youth's Companion.

Hard Cash.

"Tight money is conducive to good behavior," observed the snake editor.

"How do you figure that out?" asked the horse editor.

"A prizefight which has to come off in New Orleans has been postponed on account of the scarcity of cash."

"Well, if that had been in England instead of America, I should not have been surprised."

"What difference would it make as to the country?"

"In England tight money directly affects the prime requisite of fighting."

"What's that?"

"Pounds."—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

From Different Standpoints.

The value of an exercise must be determined by its effect. Thus it has been noticed that a boy who can play baseball for two hours on a hot afternoon and then go out rowing cannot saw wood for more than five minutes without evincing symptoms of general debility. This proves that baseball is healthier than sawing wood. The boys admit it themselves.—Boston Transcript.

Fast Time.

"They say they have college boys to push the wheeling chairs at the World's fair."

"Yes. I was wheeled through the Liberal Arts building by a Yale man. I couldn't have got through it if I hadn't."

"Why not?"

"He was the champion sprinter of his class."—Harper's Bazar.

The Financial Phase.

Man (in theater, to woman in front)—Madam, I paid $1.50 for this seat, and your hat"—

Woman (calmly)—That hat cost $40.—New York Weekly.

An Object In View.

He—She says she likes to have me call on her.

She—What's the name of the fellow she is trying to hurry up?—Brooklyn Life.

Common Prudence.

Wife—Why, Charles, what do you mean by burning our old love letters?

Husband—I have been reading them, my dear, and it occurred to me that after I die some one who wished to break my will might get hold of them and use them to prove I was insane.—Tit-Bits.

A Pathetic Appeal.

"Brethren," said a preacher when the collection was being made, "perhaps one of you will be good enough to put a needle and some thread in the bag so that I may be enabled to make some use of the buttons with which you are all so liberal."—Hormiga de Oro.

The first summer Assembly of the North Dakota Chautauqua comes off June 28th to July 17th. An extensive program has been arranged, including many noted speakers, singers, etc., and the occasion promises to be most interesting and instructive. Devils Lake is a summer resort point. The Great Northern Railway gives reducep rates. Address J. B. Fancher, Secretary, Devils Lake, N. D. for progams and other inform. A trip to the lake and assembly will make an enjoyable outing.

A LARGE DROP IN RATES TO THE WEST.

The Great Northern inaugurated its new train service to the Pacific Coast on the 8th inst. With sweeping reductions in rates, amounting to 40 percent in many cases. The rate From St. Paul and Minneapolis to Puget Sound was reduced First-class from $60.00 to ; to Spokane from $56 to $50; and to Helena and Butte from $40 to $25, with corresponding reductions on second-class tickets both through rates applying proportionately to intermediate points. It is the purpose of the Great Northern to make rates to help the development of its territory. It is much the shortest line across the continent, was built on business principles, and at a cost of about one half of that of the older trans-continental lines, and is therefore prepared to correspondingly well by its territory and patrons in rates and accommedations.

Last summer I was attacked with a bad case of flux, and after taking four doses of Beggs' Diarrhoea Balsam was immediately relieved and cured. I have sold it for the past six months and can say that it gives general satisfaction.—. W. Smith, M. D., Puxico, Mo.— For sale by J. L. Johnson, Druggist.

DOES FREEZING KILL FISH?

Experiments in Which They Were Not Consulted Proves It Does.

A number of live perch were secured and placed in water at the ice manufactory, and the water was put in the process of crystallization. It requires about sixty hours to freeze a cake of ice, and during this time the fish were watched to ascertain the effect of the intense cold which surrounded them. They kept alive and continued to swim in the water until their confines were so narrowed that they had no space in which to move.

The ice in its freezing process begins at the outside and freezes toward the center, so the space in which the fish had their liberty was gradually narrowed down until the fish were incased and the water around them froze, pinioning them tightly in its fold.

Each fish when the cake was completed was as natural as life, its fins and tail being spread as they were while in the act of swimming. The cake of ice containing the fish was placed on exhibition, and numerous bets involving several hundred dollars were made as to the outcome of the experiment.

The cake was left intact for a day or so and then cut open and the fish taken out and placed in water. They were left for some time, and of the five fishes which were originally put in the cake none of them exhibited a return to life so far as can be definitely determined except one, and whether this one was indeed alive is open to conjecture.—New Haven Register.

His Only Hope.

"Say, mister," said convict No. 487, "I've always been orderly, ain't I?"

"Yes," replied the guard. "You have."

"Purty company, too, when I get a chance to be, ain't I?"

"Yes."

"Don't it strike you that I've been here long enough for nothin' but blowin' open a safe with dynamite?"

"I don't know about that. It's a pretty serious case."

"But you see it was a mistake. The dynamite lightin' close to the safe was accidental. I was after the proprietor. My object was to terrify the red-handed oppressor of honest labor into dividin' on the spot."

"You didn't expect to find him in his office at 1 o'clock in the morning, did you?"

"That ain't got anything to do with the case," he replied earnestly. "What I want to know is whether you will do me a favor?"

"Yes, if it is reasonable. What do you want?"

"Well, partner, I'm awful tired of stayin' in here. I wish ye'd circulate a report that I'm an anarchist."—Washington Star.

A Sight o' Comfort.

Ragged Robert: "What fur are yeh carryin' that scrap o' paper around?"

Mouldy Mike: "It's a sight o' comfort, that bit o' readin' is. I got it out of a newspaper."

Mouldy Mike: "It's an article tellin' of th' millions o' disease-breedin' bacteria that's been found in a bank note."

A POOR SUBSTITUTE for a well-known medicine pays more profit to a dealer, when he sells it. That's the reason he annoys you with his claim that it is "just as good." And that is one reason why every woman who wants Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription should go to a reliable dealer.

Every woman does want it, if she's suffering from any ailment peculiar to her sex. If she's "run-down," or delicate, she needs it just as much. It's a special tonic, that builds her up; a legitimate medicine, that corrects and cures. For every "female complaint" and weakness, it is the only remedy so safe and certain that it can be guaranteed. If it doesn't benefit or cure, in every case, you have your money back.

What else, can be "just as good" for you?

A long advertisement is unnecessary to convince you that you need Dr. Sage's Remedy for your Catarrh. Its makers offer $500 for a case they cannot cure.

Ohio has had several meanings fitted to it. Some say that it is a Suwanee word meaning "the beautiful river." Others refer to the Wyandotte word Oheza, which signified "something great."

Michigan is from an Indian word meaning "great lake."

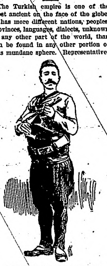
TURKISH STAGE CRAFT.

DRAMATIC ART AMONG THE OTTOMANS.

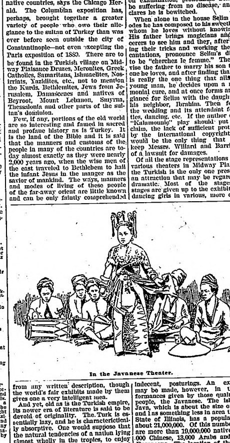
Plays With Familiar Plots That Are Favorites in Turkey—People of the Isle of Java Love Pantomime and Dancing.

The Turkish empire is one of the most ancient on the face of the globe. It has more different nations, peoples, provinces, languages, dialects, unknown in any other part of the world, than can be found in any other portion of this mundane sphere. Representatives of several of these nationalities have rarely, if ever, been seen in America, and some of them could not be induced to leave the boundaries of their own native countries, says the Chicago Herald. The Columbian exposition has, perhaps, brought together a greater variety of people who owe their allegiance to the sultan of Turkey than was ever before seen outside the city of Constantinople—not even excepting the Paris exposition of 1889. There are to be found in the Turkish village on Midway Plaisance Druzes, Meronites, Greek Catholics, Samaritans, Ishmaelites, Nosirriats, Yazidites, etc., not to mention the Kurds, Bethlemites, Jews from Jerusalem, Damascenes and natives of Beyroot, Mount Lebanon, Smyrna, Thessalonia and other parts of the sultan's dominion.



Actor-Musician From Smyrna.

Few, if any, portions of the old world are so interesting and famed in sacred and profane history as is Turkey. It is the land of the Bible and it is said that the manners and customs of the people in many of the countries are to-day almost exactly as they were nearly 2,000 years ago, when the wise men of the east traveled to Bethlehem to hail the infant Jesus in the manger as the savior of mankind. The ways, manners and modes of living of these people of the far-away orient are little known and can be only faintly comprehended from any written description, though the world's fair exhibits made by them gives one a very intelligent idea.



In the Javanese Theater.

And yet, old as is the Turkish empire, its newer era of literature is said to be devoid of originality. The Turk is essentially lazy, and he is characteristically absorptive. One would suppose that the natural tendencies of a nation lying almost wholly in the tropics, to enjoy its dolce far niente, would have resulted ages ago in the springing up of a native drama, original in every way. Such has not been the case. Although the drama in its various forms and the lighter orders of entertainment flourish in Turkey, they are not indigenous to the soil, as it were. The earlier histories of the empire make no mention of the drama, and it is probable that it was first introduced in Greece, India or Egypt—possibly from all three—in different parts of the empire.

Turks Like Comedy Best.

As shown by the stage productions in the Turkish theater at the world's fair, the Ottomans are more inclined to comedy than to tragedy. To the casual visitor, unable to "talk Turkey," the comedy is very doleful, and it is necessary for one to listen to the "lecturer," who stands in a box near the stage and explains as the play progresses, to understand what it is all about. The play now being presented has an unpronounceable title, but in plot it is so like the old English comedy, "Damon and Pythias," written by Richard Edwards in Queen Elizabeth's time, that it is not at all improbable that the idea was "borrowed" from that source, just as dramatists of our own time receive inspiration. If we listen to the lecturer" we will know what we are "taking in." "Thees, play, ladies and gentlemen," says the swarthy, turbaned individual, who prides himself on his mastery of the English language, "is all about a great king. Now, thees king hat two days—one a day of goot fortune ant the next a day of bat fortune. Whoever comes to see him on the day of goot fortune is met with joy ant pleasant receptions; but whoever comes to see him on the unfortunate day, no matter who he is, must die. There is no excuse for it.

"Well, one day the king he been hunting in the forest and hat his life saved by Yusuf, a peasant. To Yusuf the king expresses much thanks ant invite him to come to see him, when he will reciprocate. (Here the lecturer beamed with delight at his success in wrestling with the long words of the vernacular.) Then the king goes home ant soon after Yusuf call upon him to pay his respect. Oh, sad it was that Yusuf calls on the unfortunate day. To him the king looks, much sorrowful. 'I am sad,' he says, and the tear pours down his face, 'that you should come on this day. The law, which is greater than I, says that you shall have to die, and I cannot change the law.'

Yusuf Wasn't Worried.

"'Do not trouble about it,' says Yusuf. 'I will not ask you to break the law.'

"'If I could, by giving you half of my kingdom, save you, I would do it.'

"'No, sire, say no more. I only ask your majesty to allow me to go home to set my affairs in order ant say good-bye to my family. Then I come back to die.'

"'The law requires that you should have somebody to remain here as a hostage,' said the king.

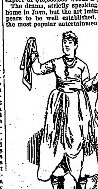
"'Then Zuleykha, who is betrothed to the king's daughter, ant who was a boyhood playmate of Yusuf, offers to become his hostage. The king accepts him and Yusuf departs. He intends to come back by the day he has promised, but he meets a bant of robbers ant they make him a prisoner. The hour for Yusuf's execution draws near, but no Yusuf is in sight. Zuleykha believes his frent will come, but the last moment arrives and he is about to die, when Yusuf, who has escaped from the robber, rushes in with the chains upon his wrists. The king, touched by the devotion of the two friends, declares that Yusuf is pardoned, ant he is loaded down with presents, while the wedding of Zuleykha to the king's daughter is commanded."

This is all given in one act and with one stage setting, representing not only the king's palace, but the robbers' lair in the forest as well. Two other acts are devoted wholly to wedding festivities and dancing. But, if the author of "Damon and Pythias," were he alive, should see fit to make a claim that his play had been cribbed, the Turkish author of the "Kalamounie" drama, which was given during the earlier weeks of the exposition, might put in a counter claim for royalties against E. S. Willard, the actor, of J. M. Barrie, who wrote "The Professor's Love Story." The synopsis of the Turkish "love story" is as follows: Act 1 shows Selim, the leading man, in bed. His sister sits near by, spinning at her wheel. Selim's health has been failing from some mysterious cause, and nobody has been able to diagnose his case. His father has gone for a doctor, who is a quack and who, on examination, pronounces Selim to be suffering from no disease, and declares he is bewitched.

When alone in the house Selim sings odes he has composed to his sweetheart, whom he loves without knowing it. His father brings magicians and sorcerers to see him and they, after playing their tricks and working their incantations, pronounce Selim's disease to be "cherchez le femme." They advise the father to marry his son to the one he loves, and after finding that love is really the one thing that ails the young man, he decides upon a matrimonial cure, and at once forms an allegiance for Selim with the daughter of his neighbor, Ibrahim. Then follows the wedding and its attendant festivities, dancing, etc. If the author of the "Kalamounie" play should put in a claim, the lack of sufficient protection by the international copyright law would be the only thing that could keep Messrs. Willard and Barrie out of a lawsuit for damages.

Of all the stage representations in the various theaters in Midway Plaisance the Turkish is the only one presenting an attraction that may be regarded as dramatic. Most of the stages are stages are given up to the exhibition of dancing girls in various, more or less indecent, posturings. An exception may be made, however, in the performances given by those quaint little people, the Javanese. The island of Java, which is about the size of Cuba, and has something less in area than the State of Illinois, has a population of about 21,000,000. Of this number there are more than 19,000,000 natives, 325,000 Chinese, 13,000 Arabs and 40,000 Europeans. The location of the island is only about 5 or 6 degrees south of the equator, yet the climate is delightful, the average temperature being 80 degrees at noon and 70 degrees at night. The island has 600 miles of railroad, an efficient telegraph system and a standing army of 35,000 men. It is the most prosperous and fertile tropical island in the world. It is purely agricultural and, besides supporting its own dense population, raises a surplus for export of $40,000,000 worth a year.

The drama, strictly speaking, has no home in Java, but the art imitative appears to be well established. Among the most popular entertainments of the Javanese is a kind of pantomime, wherein some story of the exploit of the gods, demigods and heroes of the Hindu and Javan mythology are represented with the attributes and in the situations described in their popular poems. At one style of such exhibitions the characters are represented by real persons, richly dressed as described in the poem; at another by shadows on a screen, produced by the use of leather figures from eighteen to twenty inches high, each made to represent a character in the story. At another, the figures are, more properly puppets than shadows; they are made of wood and are about ten or twelve inches high. They are operated from beneath and are made to perform their parts without the intervention of a screen.



A Turkish Actress.

In each of these different styles of entertainment the manager of the theater rehearses the story, which he illustrates by the pantomime work of the persons employed to represent the characters by the shadows, or by the manipulated puppets. At intervals the orchestra engaged by the theater performs selections. The instruments, as well as the music, are peculiar and novel. Several are required to compose a "gamalan" or band, the most conspicuous of which is the gong. It is regarded by the Javanese as the most musical of all monotonous instruments, and it certainly is powerful in its effect. In addition there are steel and wooden bars arranged on sounding boards, covering a diatonic scale of two octaves; an instrument somewhat resembling the violin and reed instruments.

Dancing—that is, stage dancing—with the Javans, as with Asiatics in general, consists in graceful attitudes of the body and in the slow movement of the arms and legs, particularly the former. The hands and fingers, even, express their poetic ideas. Javanese women in general do not appear in any kind of public performances. The dancing girls of Java form a class by themselves; some belong to the household of the native sovereign and heriditary prince. When these dignitaries entertain Europeans the dancing girls are brought to the hall with great care and under a guard in a large palanquin borne on men's shoulders. There are bands of dancing girls to be found in the principal towns who hire themselves to perform on particular occasions for the general public entertainment, but these are generally less attractive and as a rule are profligate characters.

INVESTIGATING THE HUMAN EYE.

By Means of Two New Instruments All Its Functions and Diseases Are Known.

The London Optician, in describing the remarkable progress that has been made of late years in the treatment of eye diseases, says that with the ophthalmoscope and ophthalmometer there are very few problems with regard to the functions and diseases of the human eye that cannot be determined by an expert in a very few moments of time.

It may safely be asserted that there is no department of knowledge of the functions and diseases of the human body that is so advanced as that of ophthalmology, and this has been the work of the civilization of the nineteenth century. With the ophthalmoscope the circular opening in the iris, which we call the pupil is made a window looking upon a scarlet picture, in the center of which is a beautiful white moon-like disc, over which radiate vessels pulsating with the blood constantly pumped in by the heart. The darker returning current in the veins is also seen, while the varying and almost numberless changes made by disease are noticed by the practiced eye, and tell a tale of warning, and often of woe. The entrance of the optic nerve in the retina, a little spot one-seventeenth of an inch in diameter, is made to appear as a white disc.

Beside all this, the lens and the great vitreous humor—those transparent structures that make up the greater part of the interior of the eye—are so lighted up that any changes in them, however minute, are magnified by their own power as lenses and clearly seen. With the instrument for measuring the radius of the cornea, the ophthalmometer, another variety of revelation is made, which reduces the choosing of glasses to aid vision to a purely scientific problem, easily and exactly solved, and with a satisfaction in the solution that removes the whole subject far from the humdrum and mechanical ideas that are often associated with such an occupation.

THE SHY MAN.

A Few Words in His Defense, Presumably by a Woman.

One of the characters in a modern novel is made to say, "I love a shy man. He is getting so scarce."

Perhaps that is why he is so really delicious.

When he blushes palpably, but without looking awkward, one is drawn toward him by a certain sentiment of affinity, and so long as he is just shy enough, but not too shy, he wins more and more upon one.

To draw a really shy man out of his shyness is a pleasing task, and the more so as he is generally enchanted to give expression to the thoughts and ideas that he usually keeps locked fast away within himself. One comes upon a stray jewel or two now and then in such cases in the shape of an unexpected thought that astonishes the discoverer because it seems so different from the person from whom it emanates.

I assure you I think shy men are sometimes very charming, but then one must be a little bit shy one's self in order to appreciate them.

Do you know any nice ones, and do you know that they come out of their shell in a tete-a-tete, and not always then, so that there is a pleasing element of uncertainty about them which adds to the interest they inspire?

A Little Chinese Aristocrat.

The city of Washington will soon lose one of its picturesque figures, as the present Chinese minister's term soon expires, and he will take his little daughter back to China with him. Little Miss Mi was born in Washington two years ago. She can "chin-chin" a little in English, and is democratic in her mingling with and greeting other children and citizens in Dupont Circle, where she takes her airings. She is a charming little doll, as droll and quaint a figure as one can see in weeks, in her red frocks, junk shoes and tiny embroidered cap, and is docility and serenity herself. She is a model of manners to the wild little Americans in the park, blinking her little black eyes at the flower beds, pointing at the blossoms, clapping her hands with joy, but never exercising her diplomatic privilege of defying the policeman and of arrest by helping herself to the posies. —Philadelphia Ledger.

It Was Rough.

Fashion Briefs.

The latest thing in dress, the "clown" sleeve, is simply a mass of overlapping frills.

A very pretty and serviceable fabric and one that is quite new resembles Oxford shirting and is shot so that in any color there is a shade of white.

Very much in evidence at the present moment is the black gown; indeed, it has a daily increasing popularity. It is by no manner of means a plain affair, but is the most elaborate of the season's gowns. A favorite material for solid black gowns is Brussels net. It has a square raised dot like the dot of a point d'esprit, but is quite unlike that fine-meshed lace in that it is heavy and thick instead of sheer.

A pretty chatelaine pin is a wreath of white enamel leaves mingled with pearls.

Crossed words behind an enamel shield makes a new brooch.

A new material, and one which has every indication of lasting popularity is called silk homespun. It is made of pure silk carded and spun into threads.

Very soft velvets of almost grenadine thinness are among the novelties in millinery trimmings.

Eton and Spanish jackets in infinite variety and in all sizes, to be used with summer silks and fine wool dresses, are displayed in the shops. Those in black are either jet or black cord dotted in jet. Gold and jet are frequently mingled. Iridescent and jewel bead jackets are used on shot silk gowns, and frequently these are accompanied by bands of the same sort set on over velvet.

Women, on the average, marry four years earlier in life than men.

Goethe states that he one day saw the exact counterpart of himself coming toward him.

One Notable Exception.

"I don't believe there is or ever was a female in the world," exclaimed Mr. Chugwater when the discussion had reached its height, "who didn't always insist on having the first and last word!"

"Oh, yes, there is, Josiah," said Mrs. Chugwater, soothingly.

"Name her, madam! Name her!"

"The Sphinx."

And Mrs. Chugwater, as usual, had the last word.—Chicago Tribune.

When on the tracks the east-bound Lehigh Valley flyer struck the forward part of the carriage and a second later the crushed bodies of the occupants were flying through the air. All were mangled beyond recognition, but for the clothing they wore. Miss Bovee was decapitated. The train stopped, but before it backed up to the scene moved onward. It seems to be a case of mutual negligence on the part of the company and the killed.

FIFTY THIRD CONGRESS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS.

Condensed Record of the Business Being Transacted by our National Law-makers—Routine Report Day by Day.

Washington, Aug. 23.—In the senate Mr. Allen (Pop. Neb.) offered an amendment to the Voorhees repeal bill in the form of a provision for the coinage of silver at the present rate of 16 to 1, under the same conditions enforced as to the coinage of gold, and directing the coinage (without unnecessary delay) of the silver bullion now in the treasury. It was referred to the finance committee, as was also a bill introduced by Mr. Peffer (Pop. Kan.) for the reduction of the salaries of all the government officers from $1,000 upwards, by 15 and 20 per cent. Mr. Voorhees (Dem. Ind.), chairman of the finance committee, addressed the senate in advocacy of the bill reported by him last Friday discontinuing the purchase of silver bullion. Senator Voorhees' speech was listened to with great attention. Nearly every senator was in his seat, many members of the house occupying seats in the rear, and the galleries contained the largest crowd of the session. The presiding officer was obliged to threaten to clear the galleries in order to repress the applause called forth by Mr. Voorhees' affirmation of allegiance to Cleveland, and other strong points.

The house passed the senate bill in aid of the California mid-winter international exposition. Mr. Johnson (Dem. Ohio) introduced his interconvertible bond bill and had it referred to the banking and currency committee with leave to report at any time after the silver debate. The silver debate was then resumed, and Mr. Brickner (Dem. Wis.) spoke in favor of the repeal of the purchasing clause. Mr. Mallory (Dem. Fla.) made a speech in opposition to the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. He did not believe that this repeal would restore confidence or remedy the evils which now existed. Mr. Hopkins (Rep. Ill.) charged the Democrats with partisanship in mapping out the plan of procedure for the consideration of this great question and then proceeded to speak in favor of the Wilson bill. Mr. Lane (Dem. Ill.) was in favor of free silver and denied that the silver dollar was a false dollar. At no place in this country was it worth less than 100 cents. The next speaker was Mr. Bynum (Dem. Ind.), who advocated the repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman bill.

Washington, Aug. 24.—Lee Mantle's claim to a seat in the senate from the State of Montana has been rejected—ayes, 35; nays, 30. Mr. Manderson (Rep. Neb.), who charged his vote—nay to aye—in order to make a motion to reconsider, made that motion. A motion to lay the motion to reconsider on the table was made by Mr. Vance, but, without action on it, the senate adjourned, leaving the Mantle case still open. Among the bills introduced in the senate was one by Mr. Pascoe (Dem. Mass.) a substitute for the minority bill of the finance committee (proposing silver coinage at 20 to 1). The substitute proposes a commission of three citizens of the United States to ascertain and report before January, 1894, the intrinsic relative value of gold and silver, and that on that report the secretary of the treasury shall fix and determine the ratio. A resolution offered yesterday by Mr. Peffer (Pop. Kan.) as to the violation of the law by the national banks in declining to pay depositors' checks in currency was taken up to-day, and a motion to refer it to the committee on finance made by Mr. Hoar (Rep. Mass.) gave rise to a long and somewhat excited discussion. The resolution went to the foot of the calendar, where it can be reached only by an affirmative vote.

The house met at 10 o'clock and the silver debate was opened at once by Mr. C. W. Stone (Rep. Pa.), who spoke for repeal and adjured members to disregard partisan feeling in dealing with the subject. Mr. Covert (Dem. N. Y.) pleaded for unconditional repeal, and comparing silver to a faithful servant fallen into bad habits, held that nothing would suffice to restore it but the gold cure. Mr. Fitch (Dem. N. Y.) followed in the same line. Mr. Dalzell (Rep. Pa.) contended for the repeal of the purchase act, and ascribed the difficulties of the present situation to Democratic hostility to the tariff. Mr. Hatch (Dem. Mo.) spoke in favor of free coinage.

Washington, Aug. 25.—The five-minute debate in the house on the Wilson bill began with a speech by Mr. Waugh (Rep. Ind.), who spoke for repeal as in the interest of bimetallism. Mr. Somers (Dem. Wis.) favored bimetallism, but would not vote for unconditional repeal. Mr. Johnson (Rep. N. D.) spoke for silver. Mr. Pickler (Rep. S. D.) asked unanimous consent to change the existing order so as to take a vote on Monday on an amendment confining the free coinage to the American product. This was objected to by Mr. Wilson, in charge of the administration bill. Mr. Pickler then tried to arrange for a vote on the American product free coinage proposition after the Wilson bill had been passed, but again objection was made. He then proceeded to criticise President Cleveland as being under English influence. Mr. Lucas (Rep. S. D.) and Mr. Hartman (Rep. Mont.) spoke for free coinage, the latter intimating that his people would not remain protectionists if the party failed to observe the bimetallic plank.

In the senate Mr. Peffer (Pop. Kan.) spoke in favor of free coinage. The Lee Mantle senatorial case went over for a day.

Washington, Aug. 26.—Mr. Vest (Dem. Mo.) sent to the clerk's desk and had read a communication from the director of the mint, sent in response to an inquiry to give statistics as to the quantity of silver bullion purchased since 1878, the date of the Bland-Allison act, its cost, the amount coined, etc. Mr. Vest summed up the figures in order to show that if all the silver dollars were coined at the ratio proposed in his bill (20 to 1) there would be still a profit to the treasury on the whole silver transactions in 1878 of $15,267,903. He intimated pretty broadly that Mr. Carlisle, in his letter to Senator Voorhees on the same subject, had not treated the question fairly. Mr. Hill (Dem. N. Y.) then took the floor and spoke in favor of bimetallism. He declared that if the president turned his back upon bimetallism, the estblished policy of the country, and upon the pledges of the Democratic party he (Mr. Hill) would not follow him, and the president would have to rely upon Republican senators to carry out his plan. He declared, however, that he would vote for the pending bill unawed by power and uncorrupted by federal patronage. The speech caused a decided sensation. At the conclusion of Senator Hill's speech he was heartily congratulated by many senators. Senator Stewart of Nevada followed with a free silver speech.

The five-minute debate on the silver bill began in the house at 10 o'clock this morning. Mr. Pendleton (Dem. Tex.) and Mr. Bowers (Rep. Cal.) were in favor of free coinage, and Mr. Dockery (Dem. Mo.) spoke in favor of bimetallism. Mr. Marsh (Rep. Ill.) opposed the Wilson bill and favored the free coinage of silver. Mr. Compton (Dem. Md.) spoke for unconditional repeal, and Mr. Monroe (Dem. Miss.) against the repeal. Mr. Moon (Rep. Mich.) spoke for bimetallism, and Mr. Cobb (Dem. Ala.) opposed unconditional repeal. Mr. Burrows (Rep. Mich.) advocated repeal and was opposed to free coinage. Mr. Durburrow (Dem. Ill.) was in favor of repeal and urged upon his colleagues the necessity of restoring confidence among the people. Mr. Springer (Dem. Ill.) favored the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. Mr. Sickles (Dem. N. Y.) spoke for unconditional repeal.

PROBABLY LOST.

New York, Aug. 28.—Skippers of fishing craft who came through the cyclone that struck this neighborhood on Thursday are inclined to think that the Ella M. Johnson is lost. She is the only smack of the Jersey fleet of about seventy-five vessels unaccounted for. She was commanded by Capt. Ericksson and had a crew of nine men, mostly Scandinavians. It may have been the wreck of the Johnson that the pilot boat Actae passed off Barnegat. The crew of the Actae saw a spar standing out of the water off Barnegat on Friday. FOUR KILLED.

Brewster, N. Y., Aug. 28.—A terrible accident occurred on the Harlem railroad near Dykeman's station, just north of here, which cost four lives. It was the result of a head-on collision between the west-bound express train No. 13, which left Forty-second street, New York, at 10:30 a. m., and the Pawling accommodation, train No. 20, which left Pawling at 12:30. The killed are: Daniel Donohue, engineer of train 20; William Elliott, engineer train 13; William Best, fireman of train 13; Nellie Reid, aged nineteen, of this place.

ASTOUNDING CHARGES.

Chicago, Aug. 28.—In a bill for divorce filed in the superior court by Mrs. Bella H. Hassett against William E. Hassett of this city, some most astounding charges are made. It is alleged, and the allegations are supported by written evidence that Hassett conspired with the wife of a wealthy farmer named Stone, now living near Nashua, Iowa, to murder Stone, get a divorce from his own wife and then marry the widow of Stone, who, by the letters attached, was more than ready to put her own husband out of the way that she might marry Hassett.

FATAL WRECK.

Black Lick, Ohio, Aug. 28.—A freight wreck occurred on the Panhandle road at this place. Thirteen cars and an engine were demolished. Engineer John Kramer was slightly scalded, and Fireman S. C. Stoneburner badly scalded. Mitchell, but name unknown, who was riding on the engine, was killed. One hundred and fifty yards of track were torn up and trains delayed five hours.

COINS ATTACHED.

New York, Aug. 28.—Deputy Sheriff Mulvaney said to-day that he had secured possession of the $5,000 worth of world's fair souvenir coins upon which an attachment had been obtained for $2,250 by the New York Press company, limited, against the World's Fair Exposition company. They were taken by the sheriff's officers to a safe deposit company.

WAS ACCIDENTAL.

Duluth, Minn., Aug. 28.—Johannas, a son of R. O. Johnson, accidentally shot Louis Larsen's son Ernest, at Two Harbors, the bullet penetrating his right lung. Serious results are feared. Johannas was preparing to shoot a bird Ernest had shown him when the accident occurred.

QUINCY RESIGNS.

Boston, Aug. 28.—Josiah Quincy mailed a letter to President Cleveland Friday night in which he tendered his resignation as assistant secretary of state. It was represented to Mr. Quincy that he was the only man to lead the Democrats in the next state campaign.

ROBBED THE THIRD TIME.

Graceville, Minn., Aug. 28.—The office of the American Express company was broken into and robbed for the third time this summer. About one hundred pennies and some valuable packages were taken. No clue to the perpetrators.

Game wardens have appeared in Crookston and are expected up here before the 1st, They seem to think that the natives up here have been killing prairie chickens but we are positive that nothing but "short billed snipe have been killed in this locality this season. The idea that our sportsman would violate the law killing chickens is preposterous.

It was not long ago that the Twin City banks agreed to refuse checks drawn on local banks outside of St. Paul and Minneapolis, Now as many of the same banks as survived the financial storm are talking about issuing certified checks to supply the scarcety of money. Wonder what the country banks will do with such checks when they come around.—Norman County Herald.

The Minneapolis wheat men are still figuring on how they are going to buy the wheat crop this fall. All kinds of schemes are being talked of except, of course paying cash for the wheat, With one breath they are asking for an "honest dollar,' and in the next propose to buy the farmer,s wheat with a doubtful and very poor substitute. If they can get possession of the wheat without cash at an extremely low price they will be in luck and can then go at work to better their price and increase the profits.

This country was visited by a heavy hail storm Saturday morning and while no damage was done around Fertile to speak of other localities did not escape so luckily. A strip three-quarters of a mile wide, extending from Beltrami to Twin Valley was nearly destroyed by the storm. Farmers in that vicinity had just commenced cutting and according to reports but little is left for them to harvest, The hail that fell here was small and not of quantity enough to do any harm, besides nearly all of the grain is in the shock,—Fertile Journal.

1836, 1857, 1873 and 1893. Each of these years a money panic. Why is it that this country, so vast, so rich in resources should have a panic every 20 years? Ireland starves when the potato crop fails; Russia has a famine when a drought destroys her crops; India suffers when pestilence stalks abroad in the land. Here the people suffer one year in twenty with an abundance to eat, with peace and health. Why is it? Is there not something rotten in the United States as well as in Denmark of yore?—Norman County Herald.

It took 10,417 bushels of wheat to pay Abraham Lincoln his annual salery as president of the United States, This took 801 acres of land worth $10 per acre, or $8,010 worth of land, This required 16 hands and teams to cultivate it. It now takes 76,923 bushels to pay Cleveland's salery. This requires 5917 acres of land worth $30 per acre, or $177,510 worth of land, and 118 hands and teams—that is, provided they tilled and harvested 50 acres to the hand. If this thing keeps on in this rut, it won't take long till it will take 1,000 men to earn enough to support Cleveland one year! Great Republic this!—Southern Mercury.

How to move the coming crop is getting to be the paramount issue with the elevator and grain men of Minneapolis says the Pioneer Press. In some ten days or two weeks at the most, the new crop will be pouring in from the fields of three states, and as yet the grain men have not decided upon any plan of meeting the issue. It can't be said, however, that they are not taking a keen interest in the subject and doing the best they know how to solve the problem. Several meetings of the leading grain and elevator men of Minneapolis have been held, the last one yesterday, but there is yet nothing to report in the way of definate results Some progress toward the desired end has been made, however, and it is now given out that the matter will reach a settlement in the course of the next two or three days.

There is some talk of keeping the World's Fair open another year, but those in the best position to know whereof they speak say that the gates will close promptly and forever on the 31st of October next. The frail buildings would hardly survive the winter, and if they did would be shabby beyond repair. The exhibitors, especially those from abroad, would not leave their exhibits for so long a time and at so great risk and expense, nor would they send others. In fact the objections to a second year of the fair are innumerable and the arguments in favor of it decidedly weak, There will be plenty of time between now and the last of October for everybody who has not seen the exposition to pay it a visit and those who do not go this year while it is a novelty would not be likely to go next. It is safe to say that everybody who sees the Columbian Exposition will see it in 1893.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Speaking of the recent election in France it may interest American voters to know how they conduct an election in that country. The Boston Herald quotes Theodore Stanton's description of the momentous proceeding as follows: "The polling booth is the town hall, a schoolroom, a church porch or the mayor's private house; never a barroom, tavern or a corner liquor store. The judges sit with uncovered heads, without cigars in their mouths and every voter doffs his hat as he approaches the ballot box, as Gen. Butler and Senator Conkling always used to do. The judges would unquestionably call a voter to order if he so far forgot the civilities due universal sufferage as to deposite his ballot with his head covered. In a word, there is such a solemnity about the act of voting in France, especially in the smaller cities, that it is almost oppressive." When the mercurial frenchman sets about overthrowing a government there is less ceremony and solemnity.—Tribune.

THEY MET OUTSIDE.

A Boarding House Episode That Occurred In Chicago.

Bixby thought he was sarcastic. He also hated Filkins.

Filkins was an inoffensive person, and why Bixby hated him no one knew. They sat across from each other at Mrs. Boggs' table. Twice a day Filkins was "roasted" by Bixby. He took it all calmly, never saying much in reply and not seeming to mind it much. Once in awhile, however, some unusually keen cut by Bixby would bring a flash to his face.

Mrs. Boggs liked Filkins, and said it was a shame the way Bixby talked to him.

It culminated, however, night before last at the dinner table. Filkins was in a thoughtful mood. Bixby was very animated. Just after soup he began on his mark:

"By the by, Filkins," he said, "I saw you on State street this afternoon."

"Yes?" said Filkins, half inquiringly.

"Yes," went on Bixby, his tone conveying a sneer. "You had a deuced pretty girl with you."

"Yes?" said Filkins again.

"You rather cut me out, old man," said Bixby, with a cutting laugh. "That same girl waited on me in Burns' lunchroom this noon and do you know she promised to meet me at 2 o'clock?"

Filkins laid down his fork slowly.

"Bixby," he said, "you are a liar!"

Mrs. Boggs saved considerable on that meal. The boarders all stopped eating, aghast. The worm had turned.

"What's that? What's that?" almost shouted Bixby.

"You are a liar," repeated Filkins.

"I want to see you outside," said Bixby furiously, getting up from his chair.

Filkins laid his napkin carefully at the side of his plate and got up.

"Certainly," he said.

Bixby rushed out of the door into the hall.

Filkins followed and the two went out the basement door.

It was about 10 minutes later when some one came in the outside door. He stopped a moment in the hall, and there was a sound of clothes being brushed. Then Filkins came into the dining room. He sat down at the table and resumed his meal. His hair was mussed, but otherwise he appeared as usual. Bixby did not come back.

The next morning every one commenced eating when Bixby appeared. He sat down in silence. A large white bandage was around his head and covered one eye. His nose was red and swollen, and a piece of court plaster partly covered his lower lip. —Chicago News.

Her Marks of Recognition.

"Now, Lisette," said the mistress to her housemaid, "how often have I told you to light the hall lamp at the proper time, else you cannot see who comes in and know whom to announce?"

"Oh, please, ma'am," the girl replied, "I know all the regular visitors, even in the dark. I can tell who they are by certain signs. Alderman F—— steps in quite softly, mutters 'Good evening,' and hangs up his waterproof without taking any further notice of me. The doctor says first thing, 'Well, how are you?' and feels my pulse. The music master whistles a lively tune and gives me a hearty shake of the hand. The curate bows two or three times because he is so short sighted and isn't quite sure whom he is addressing. The professor walks in without saying a word, stands a while absorbed in thought and then gets me to help him off with his top coat. The surveyor squeezes my hand so hard as to make me scream, and the young lawyer—hum (blushes), he—I can also make out who he is every time."—Petit Meridional.

Couldn't Be Helped.

"Edwin, I am thine."

Sliding both her hands upon the back of his neck, she gazed into his mustache.

"Bless you," he said, with great feeling, kissing away the drops of perspiration that clung to her eyebrow.

"Yes," she continued, in a soft tone, "I had not thought to return your love, but I could not maintain the coolness I designed to meet your importunities with."

"That," he rejoined, "is not surprising, with the mercury 90 in the shade. Coolness is out of the question, my darling."

Thus by different methods of reasoning they both arrived at the same conclusion.—Detroit Tribune.

The Dumb Animal Spake.

An amusing incident occurred at the recent agricultural show at Munich. When the prince regent of Bavaria was inspecting the sheep, he happened to stand in front of a fine wether, when the animal suddenly raised its head, and the bystanders distinctly heard it utter the words:

"Long live the prince regent!"

A Summer Idyl.

They were sitting in the twilight
Where the waves break on the sand,
And an arm was wound around her,
They were clasping hand to hand,
And he bent a little closer
Toward a face sunkissed with tan,
And to Susie Mamie whispered,
"Don't you wish we'd see a man?"
—New York World.

Why He Left.

A dispute once arose between a landlord and his tenant. The latter had given notice to quit, but would not put a bill in his window to say that his house was "To Be Let." To make matters worse, they went to law about it. The judge, having heard the case, made an order for the defendant to put a bill up within 14 days. The landlord was so overjoyed at his victory that on the fourteenth day he took a friend with him round to the house to tease his tenant. The bill was up in the window plain enough, but under it was another bill, which ran as follows: "Leaving through smell from the drains."—Tit-Bits.

Willie—But he has a good reason.

Mrs. Slimson—Why, what is it?

Willie—His father is learning how to swim.—Truth.

Her Fault.

Attired in a flimsy gown of white, she was a dream of loveliness.

Her mother, dressed in blue calico, with an apron of unbleached muslin, gazed fondly upon the beautiful girl.

"My daughter," she murmured, "how popular you are!"

The cheeks of the young woman flushed with pleasure.

"Why, mamma!" she cooed in expostulation.

"Yes," the parent proceeded, "that makes four nice young men who have called on you this evening."

"Mamma"——

The girl laid her soft hand in her mother's toil worn palm.

——"that is on your account. I have you to thank for that."

"How, my child?"

"In that you married a small man who couldn't lick a sick chicken. Oh, mamma, I am so grateful!"

At that she laughed softly to herself and seemed very happy.—Detroit Tribune.

A Hotel's Name.

The drummer was bantering the hotel clerk in his easy, offhand manner.

"I say, old man," he said, "I met a party yesterday who has been keeping a summer hotel for 13 seasons!"

"That's an unlucky number," ventured the clerk.

"Yes, but he couldn't very well skip it, unless he went out of business, you know."

"I see," nodded the clerk.

"Of course you do. Well, he told me he made a practice, after the first five years, of calling any hotel he kept 'The Moon.' Did you ever hear of a hotel by that name?"

"No," said the clerk. "What in thunder did he give it such a name for?"

"Oh, it was just a conceit of his," replied the drummer. "He said he called it that because the hotel wasn't full all the time."—Detroit Free Press.

His Explanation.

A Washington small boy, who makes a companion of a water spaniel, appeared before the family the other day with his hair plastered close to his head and with a general air of disappointment about his clothes.

"Have you been swimming?" asked his father.

"No—that is, not exactly."

"What do you mean?"

"Well, you see, Fido fell into the water, and I took off my clothes and jumped in to rescue him."—Washington Star.

In Plain English.

Patient (to family physician)—In your absence, doctor, I was compelled to call in young Dr. Sawbones. He said the clinical symptoms indicated chronic interestital inflammation. What is that in plain English?

Family Physician—In plain English it means that Sawbones didn't know what was the matter with you.—Texas Siftings.

A Great Scheme.

Observer—If the things you are jotting down made a forcible impression on you, what's the use of making notes about them?

Confirmed Note Taker (at the fair)—Er—so that I'll remember what to forget.—Chicago Record.

An Effectual Weapon.

Mrs. Nuwife—John, I'm sure I hear burglars down stairs.

John—What would you do if you were in my place?

Mrs. Nuwife—Do? Why, tell them about the baby's new tooth, of course.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Deceitful Hawkins.

"Confidence is the mainstay of a happy married life. My wife considers me the most absolutely truthful man in the world," said Hawkins.

"Dear me, Hawkins!" returned Barlow. "How you have deceived her!"—Harper's Bazar.

Reforming.

Visitor to the Penitentiary—Now, my man, when you are released, I hope you'll turn over a new leaf.

Prisoner—I intend to. I've been a burglar, but I've made up my mind that there's more money in forgery.—Brooklyn Life.

The Reason.

Jasper—I understand now why there is an eagle with outspread wings on so many of our coins.

Jumpuppe—Why?

Jasper—It is to teach us that money flies.—Truth.

Up to Date Fashion.

Williams—Why, that isn't the same coat you had on yesterday, is it?

Roberts—No. My sister has gone out with that in mistake—pipe, tobacco pouch and all. This is hers!—Tit-Bits.

Unknown.

In vain you look for her on hill and dale,
A search devoid of reason or of rhyme,
For she has never been discovered yet,
The girl that will not flirt in summer time.
—New York Herald.

His Start.

"Do you know of an opening for me?" inquired the college graduate.

"Aint the reg'lar bars wide enough," rejoined his father, gesturing eloquently in the direction of the cornfield.—Detroit Tribune.

A Solid Man.

Cumso—That man I introduced to you is one of the wealthiest citizens of Boston.

Fangle (flippantly)—Plumber?

Cumso—No, indeed. He's a seller of spectacles.—Truth.

Opium a Benefactor.

Still another contribution to the opium controversy is furnished by Ali Dharamsi, a Mohammed solicitor of Bombay, a fellow of the university, and a justice of the peace. In giving his experience to the use of opium, both in Bombay and his native province, Cutch, he declares that, as compared with alcohol, it does not harm at all. He states positively that the quantity taken does not increase with the habit. He found opium eaters of from fifty to eighty years old looking robust and healthy. He believed the habit to be so rooted that prohibition would produce smuggling, which, in the case of a drug so small and so desired, could not be suppressed. He holds that its suppression, if it could be affected, would be followed by an immense increase, in the use of alcohol, which, to all the dark races, is most deadly. They cannot afford wine, and drink only to be drunk. There is such an ancient and deep-rooted prejudice against the use of opium in Western countries that Mr. Dharamsi's arguments are not likely to make much impression upon the opium fanatics, but there is every reason to believe that he knows what he is talking about, and his evidence is, therefore, valuable; furthermore, it is markedly confirmatory of some recent testimony on the subject, the cogency and weight of which are beyond question.

A Curious Fabric.

There is a certain dress goods fabric manufactured in France under the name of Pilou, or American flannel, which is said to be almost as inflammable as gunpowder, and extremely dangerous. It is made of cotton, and its inflammability is ascribed to the chemicals with which it is prepared. A French writer says that recently he was dining at the table of a lady who was clothed in this material. In the act of saturating an omelette with rum, to which she set fire with a match, a drop of the burning liquid was spilled on her dress, which in an instant was ablaze from top to bottom, as if it had been made of guncotton. The lady had the presence of mind to throw herself on the floor, thus putting out the fire with the aid of those present, who smothered the flames with covers, etc. An examination of the dress after the fire had been put out showed that its aspect had changed but little, except that the velvety softness peculiar to the material was gone from every spot that had been burned. The weft was intact.

The Overworked Fork.

An absurd and inconvenient dictate of the present fashion is the almost complete banishment of the teaspoon. The multiple fork has gradually encroached upon the spoon's domain till even the various grains and vegetables of the more elusive sort, which were once wont to occupy exclusive little dishes, and have a teaspoon apiece, are now amalgamated with the rest of the dinner, and disposed of as best one may with a four-tined implement. For the present teaspoons are still permitted for stirring and sipping beverages without incurring the odium of greenness and vulgarity.

Unremarked.

Mrs. Bingo—"Bobbie, didn't I give you the money to get your hair cut?"

Bobbie—"Yes'm."

Mrs. Bingo—"Then why didn't you obey me? Don't you know that a boy with such towsly hair looks like a fright?"

Bobbie—"I don't think the people in the circus noticed it."

BOOKS AND THEIR AGE.

Too Many Think They Have Treasures in Ancient Volumes.

A young man writes from St. Joseph, Mo., to a dealer in this city that he is offering for sale, through the stress of hard times, a very rare book, presumably "the oldest book in America." The volume is printed in Dutch, is in perfect condition, and was published more than 300 years ago. The present owner, whose letter proclaims his illiteracy, believes that he has a veritable treasure. He will be terribly shocked when he discovers that his treasure is worth in the market not more than $5.

Age alone gives value to but very few books. Yet the average person has an idea that if a book was printed long ago it must necessarily be valuable. And, what is curious, different people differ as to the dates that constitute a book old. There are those who fancy that a volume printed 100 years ago must be esteemed very old, very rare and very valuable. Others show you with pride a Hudibras printed—we will say—in 1750, or a Bible printed 200 years ago; and these volumes are cherished because of their antiquity! A very worthy lady living in Massachusetts recently exhibited with an elaborate flourish a volume of sermons bearing the date of 1785—a volume she revered, loved and treasured because of its age; a few moments later she gave up to the writer without any hesitancy, a charming little 1827 reprint of the New England primer.

Age only gives value to comparatively few books. Hundreds of volumes printed in the seventeenth century are to be had at our second-hand shops at prices ranging from 10 to 25 cents apiece, and the average vellum of 350 years ago is worth 80 per cent less in the market to-day than is one of Hawthorne's or of Whittier's cunning little first editions printed between 1838 and 1842. Going over an English catalogue a few days ago we made a note of the prices of items bearing dates from 1490 to 1510, and we found that the sixteen volumes offered for sale could be had for $5.92, about 35 cents apiece. Last winter here in Chicago a twenty-four volume edition of Melancthon, printed at Amsterdam in 1660, was sold to the Armour Institute library for $5. By actual weight and by its actual measurement (for they were monstrous folios in double-thick vellum) they were cheaper than coal by the ton or wood by the cord.—Eugene Field in Chicago Record.

"I have had graves dug for all the inhabitants of the parish."—Annales Politiques et Litteraires.

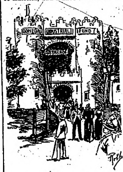
OUR WORLD'S FAIR LETTER.

AN INTERESTING DESCRIPTION OF MIDWAY ATTRACTIONS.

The Closing of the Persian Theater—The Famous Glass Workers—The Celebrated Donegal Castle in the Irish Village—The Blarney Stone.

Jackson Park, Special Correspondence—The late action of Director General Davis in closing up the Persian theater on Midway Plaisance on the ground that the dances given there were too suggestive and perhaps a little beyond the border line of the moral calls to mind very forcibly that morality can be pretty well designated and defined by geographical boundary lines about the same as religion. What is considered all right in Persia offends the modesty of the Anthony Comstocks of America, and I have no doubt that if the Persian girls attempted to pirouette around the stage in the abbreviated costumes common to the ballet of the United States that the Parsees and Mohammedans of that far-off trans-Euphrates land would be seriously shocked. The costume of the Persian dancers cannot be packed in a pill box like that of some American and European dancers noted for high kicking. Certain motions of the body of the Persian dancers distinguished for gracefulness and ease give serious offense to American tastes which have been heretofore fed upon a scanty costume pabulum in the way of moral excitement rather than upon the higher condiments of graceful terpsichorean movements of the body. The moral prudes are also trying to have the theater in the streets of Cairo closed for the same reason. In other words, the people of the United States want to see the manners and customs of all the people of the earth dressed down abbreviated and trimmed to suit American proprieties, thus placing a premium upon humbugs.



Donegal Castle.

There are many attractions lined along the broad street of the Plaisance extending nearly a mile due west from the fair grounds. One of the most notable because it is purely American in its origin is the Libbey glass works, in which nearly every kind of fancy glassware is turned out while you look on. It gives the beholder a practical and at the same time a very satisfactory insight into the great liberal art of glass making. The forms of glass displayed here are legion from the delicate fibers woven into cloth down to the translucent block of melted glass, which looks like a piece of rough crystal. A specialty in the art which seems to attract universal attention is the manufacture of fine fabrics from thinly spun glass fiber which is woven in old-fashioned hand looms. In this way cravats, handkerchiefs, napkins and even dress patterns are manufactured which appear to have all the sheen and fine appearance of satin. A very stylish gown has been constructed out of this material by the magic processes employed in female dress, making known only by modistes and women tailors. It has been placed upon a lay figure, and is now known as Princess Eulalie's dress.

The well-known affection of the Irishman for the red sod is here recognised in a very substantial form by the creation of the Midway Plaisance of two Irish villages or fac similes of noted Irish castles with appropriate surroundings. The promoters of the two displays are not on the best of terms, and it is said that the sharpest rivalry with its consequent states of mind has operated to stimulate them to employ every art of the land of Blarney to secure the lion's share of the public patronage. The two castles represented are Blarney and Donnegal, both famous in Irish legend and story. The principal attraction in the one is a generous piece of the famous Blarney stone and in the other the no less celebrated wishing chair, which is supposed to bring the wisher who sits in it in due course of time whatever he may have wished for when he sat therein. Every one knows what is supposed to be the result of kissing the Blarney stone. Nothing less than the gaining of great abilities as a persuader of an orator will result. This stone already bears evidence of having been kissed more times since it was brought here than the original back in Erin did for many a long year. You have to kneel down and reach as far as you can with neck and head to touch the precious relic with your lips the same as you do in the old historic ruin in Ireland. A very handsome revenue is derived from this source at 10 cents per smack. The Blarney castle is surrounded by a cluster of Irish thatched cottages built in exact imitation of those in the old country which are filled with products of native industry for sale. There is a large supply of bog peat piled in the yard which sells at $1 per turf. The famous Irish jig dances to the music of the Irish pipes are given frequently for the amusement of visitors, not a few of whom are reminded strongly of the olden times before they left the sod. Blarney castle village is under the direct charge of Lady Aberdeen, well known for her efforts to relieve the poverty and to direct the industrial energies of the Irish people. Donegal castle is also surrounded by its village with its industries. Inside of the castle is a picture of almost every great Irishman who became celebrated as a general, literary man, orator, writer or statesman in the past three hundred years of Irish history. Both villages have many attractions and are receiving liberal patronage.

Germany and Austria are both represented by villages built on the plan of three hundred years ago. In these the architecture and museums are for the most interesting part of the exhibits. The restaurant privileges of each of these villages furnishes the largest source of revenue. Here are served the costliest Rhenish and Austrian wines and the most toothsome and enjoyable feasts prepared by German and Austrian cooks. The Austrian village gives the most satisfactory meals upon the fair grounds, but you must expect to pay here the largest prices for what you get. Old Vienna offers numberless articles for sale in the line of jewelry ornaments and knickknacks.

The display of the log cabin and the many other relics of Sitting Bull and the Custer massacre at a prominent place on the west end of the Midway Plaisance naturally attracts a very large number of Americans and other nationalities familiar with the details of that horrible affair. The relics are all authentic and genuine, including almost everything imaginable which pertains to the Custer battlefield and the private life of the Indian chiefs who led in that fight.

One of the most meritorious shows on the Plaisance from the standpoint of a circus is the Hagenback trained animal show which includes a display of fine equestrianship on the part of lions, tigers, dogs, leopards and other savage felines. The entire performance takes place inside of a huge caged arena. A heavy net work of iron bars on all sides which is also roofed over in the same way separates the audience from all danger. Lions and tigers perform nearly every trick that the best trained dog can perform, and seem to understand the words and gesticulations of the trainer quite as well, although some of them are at times inclined to be decidedly ugly to deal with, and have once or twice attacked the trainer, but without serious results.

The French especially and the other foreign nations as well expected to easily surpass all American exhibitors in the liberal arts and manufacturers' building, but they have been terribly surprised. It is now quite generally believed that this is the reason that the foreigners withdrew their exhibits from competition. Take fur garments for instance. Both France and Russia expected to surpass America. In fact, America was scarcely considered. What their surprise was when they found more stylish and better made fur garments of all kinds made here than they could display can better be imagined than described. The American fur display is far ahead of that of either France or Russia.

Russia has a lot of cheap goods, and, with the exception of a few sables, does not merit much consideration. France sets the style in fur goods, and then, just the same as in leather and shoe goods, she is surpassed by the Yankees in following the patterns of that style in making stylish garments. America, according to the display in the Liberal Arts building, is away ahead in watches and all kinds of jewelry. The French and Germans are manufacturing styles which went out of vogue here twenty years ago. These are facts based upon statements made in interviews with experts in these branches of business. In regard to the curing of sealskins, it is quite generally known that the pelts all had to be sent to London to be dyed and then brought back to America to be made into garments. In an interview to-day with H. Liebes of San Francisco, who now with others holds a twenty-year lease of the seal fisheries of Alaska, I learned that he has a man in Brooklyn, New York, who can do equal, if not, better work than any English sealskin dyer, and he said that just as soon as the seal fisheries matter is settled with England his firm proposed to have all the dying done in this country. The reason that the English secured all of the work before was because the old Alaskan company were prejudiced in favor of English workmen and turned over all the skins to them in London. One by one our financial and industrial shackles to the old world are broken, and the time is coming when even in art these wise old stagers across the briny who smile benignantly on American gropings after perfection will change their smiles to wailings while they wonder like Rip Van Winkle how it all came about during their long sleep of security.

—Ralph McKenzie.

In Mother's Eyes.

Pierre and Maurice are French children. Pierre is the elder brother. It never has occurred to him to be jealous of the last comer, Maurice, or to be troubled about "his nose being out of joint."

He is very fond of his small brother, and seems to feel it his duty to see that he is never neglected or forgotten.

One day he was looking lovingly in his mother's face, when he happened to glance at her right eye, and to his delight he saw his image reflected in it. "Oh, there is Pierre!" he cried.

Then he looked eagerly into the left eye, and exclaimed, in sorrow and surprise: "Why, where is Maurice?"

Friendly Friends.

Jinks—"See here, old boy! You ought to do something to reduce your flesh. You are becoming fearfully stout."

Minks—"Say, Jinks, you are about the fortieth friend who has made that offensive remark to-day, and I'm getting tired of it. It worries me."

Jinks—"That's all right. Worry reduces flesh."—New York Weekly.

Large quantities of fat-producing foods are not desirable for laying hens or growing fowls. Provide a variety.

A SHREWD EASTERNER.

His Methods of Land Grabbing Were Unique If Not Commendable.

"There are devices practised in the Far West," observed an Omaha man recently, "for making money; devices that appeal to the enterprising and ingenious citizen, and that are, by a long way, more ingenious than commendable.

"Every now and then," he went on, "a shrewd Easterner sees an unlooked-for opportunity to get ahead in the West. He generally intends to remain just long enough to get a big bank account and then to return home and spend his money. Oftener than not, he does not return, and the West, particularly the new West, is recruited with just such Eastern adventurers.

"There is a man living on a claim near the frontier town of Hecla, Wyo., whose career so far has been pre-eminently successful.

"Less than a year ago he took out a land claim for six hundred acres. He had his eye upon the land adjoining his own, where an old frontiersman lived alone with his daughter.

"The shrewd Easterner gained the favor of the old man by winning his way into the daughter's affections and afterward marrying her.

"He then put his father-in-law into the way of stealing sheep that had wandered from neighboring ranches, claiming that they were 'communistic property.' Both were arrested, as the 'business' man knew and intended they should be. The latter then turned state's evidence and was set free.

"That was part of his well formulated scheme. While his father-in-law was serving out his sentence in prison the Easterner jumped the old man's claim, hired an unscrupulous neighbor to run away with his wife, and obtained a divorce on the ground of desertion.

"He now smokes the pipe of peace as he surveys his broad acres and congratulates himself upon his shrewdness. He will probably return East some day. No doubt he'll pose as a Western cattle king or something of the sort when he does."—New York Herald.

TERRIBLE VOLCANOES.

Few People Imagine What One of Them Can Do When Thoroughly Active.

Few people in this country imagine what terrible work a volcano of the regulation size can do when it once gets fully aroused. In 1883 Catopaxi threw its fiery rockets more than 3,000 feet above the crater, and in 1837, when the blazing mass confined in the same mountain was struggling for an outlet, it roared so loud that the awful noise was heard for a distance of 600 miles.

In 1797 the crater of Tunguragua, one of the great peaks of the Andes, flung out torrents of mud and lava, which dammed up a great river, opened new lakes, besides making a deposit of seething mud, ashes and lava 300 feet deep over the whole area of a valley which was twenty miles long and averaged 1,000 feet in width, says the Philadelphia Press.

The stream of lava which flowed from Vesuvius in 1837 and passed through the valley of Terre del Greco is estimated to have contained 333,000,000 cubic feet of solid matter.

In 1760 Etna poured out a flood of melted stones and ashes which covered eighty-four square miles of fertile country to a depth of from ten to forty feet.

On this occasion the sand, scoria, lava, etc., from the burning mountain formed Mt. Rosini, a peak two miles in circumference and over 4,000 feet high.

In the eruption of Vesuvius in the year 79 A. D., the time of the destruction of Pompeii, the scoria, ashes, sand and lava vomited forth far exceeded the entire bulk of the volcano itself, while in 1660 Etna disgorged over twenty times its own mass.

Vesuvius has sent its ashes into Syria, Egypt and Turkey. It buried stones of 800 pounds weight to Pompeii, a distance of six English miles, during the eruption of 79, A. D.

Cotopaxi once projected a block of stone containing over 100 cubic yards, a distance of nine and one-half miles.

IT WAS VERY TEMPTING.

A Bottle of Whisky That Was Accidentally Hidden Long Before the War.

Thirty-six years ago a man named Jones, who was employed by Frank Lockwood of Norwich, Conn., was at work on Mr. Lockwood's farm, and as a stimulant took out to the lot with him a pint flask of whisky. During the morning Jones took one nip, and seeing his employer coming he slipped the bottle into a hole in a tree standing near, intending to return and get it after Mr. Lockwood had gone home. When the opportunity came he was disgusted to find that the tree trunk was hollow and the bottle had fallen to the bottom and probably broken. Jones related the incident to Mr. Lockwood some time afterward, who laughed at the loss and thought no more about it.

Recently, during a severe wind storm, the old tree, now a rotten stump, was blown over. Mr. Lockwood went out to haul away the trunk, and was surprised to find his former employe's whisky flask safe and unbroken. He took out the cork, took one smell. "And, sir," said he, "though I've been a teetotaler nigh onto fifty years, I never was so tempted to take a taste of whisky in my life as I was then. But I didn't, and the stuff is safe up at my house."

It is said the whisky, when poured out, had the consistency and color of olive oil. It will not be used as long as Mr. Lockwood holds it.—Boston Journal.

Beaconsfield's Work in the Balkans.

The great Sobranje has sanctioned the changes in the Bulgarian constitution which the lesser Sobranje lately voted; sanctioned them with an amazing unanimity of obedience. There is no possible reason why these alterations should have displeasing to the powers, since they provide the country with a dynasty and tend to solidify the nation. A strong Bulgaria between Russia and Constantinople is most desirable, and the present conditions of the Balkans affords the surest proof of Lord Beaconsfield's sagacity at the Berlin conference. His compliance with the desires of Russia on that occasion startled many people. Russia wished to manufacture a congeries of small and independent states in order that she might occupy them in the day of her good pleasure. Lord Beaconsfield knew that independence is the last gift which a nation will willingly surrender; and the event has proved him wise in his hour. Indeed the recent act of the great Sobranje is the last disaster which has fallen upon the expansive pan-Slavist party as a result of the Russo-Turkish war; the last revenge brought in by the whirligig of time upon the victors.—Pall Mall Gazette.

The Face as an Index.

Incomplete closure of the eyelids, rendering the whites of the eyes visible during sleep, is a symptom in all acute and chronic diseases of a severe type; it is also to be observed when rest is unsound by pain, wherever seated.

Twitching of the eyelids, associated with the oscillation of the eyeballs or squinting, herald the visit of convulsions.

Widening of the orifices of the nose, with movements of the nostrils to and fro, point to embarrassed breathing from disease of the lungs or their pleural investment.

Contraction of the brows indicates pain in the head; sharpness of the nostrils, pain in the chest, and a drawn upper lip, pain in the abdomen.

To make a general rule, it may be stated that the upper third of the face is altered in the expression in affections of the brain; the middle third, in diseases of the chest, and the lower third, in the diseases of the organs contained in the abdominal cavity.

While thus engaged another slyly approached and unexpectedly knocked Capt. Bronson senseless. The latter recovered, however, in time to ably assist citizens, who succeeded in capturing and lodging in jail the assailant and his accomplices.

A couple of days ago Joseph Knitter of Winona beat his wife severely about the head with a barrel stave. An evening or two later a body of masked men, calling themselves white caps, took him from his house and thrashed him soundly with another barrel stave, and taking him to a pond of slimy, stagnant water, on the outskirts of the city, unceremoniously dumped him in, and allowed him to scramble out as best he could. No clue is had to the identity of the party.

William Gilroy of Red Wing, who is now in Chicago, has been making a desperate effort to suicide, first by cutting his throat, then setting fire to his clothing, and finally by beating his head against the bars of his cell in which he had been confined for safe keeping. He is lying in a critical condition in Alexian Brothers' hospital. Domestic infelicity is the cause.

Turning English Into Jap.

In "Chamberlain's Handbook of Colloquial Japanese," which is one of the most popular works on the subject, on page 171, he gives this sentence in English: "Let me know when everything is ready." The sentence in Japan is given directly opposite, with a little translation in the English in the order of the Japanese words. It reads thus: "Prepartion's has, eventuated time, informing honorably give deign." To one not understanding the construction of the language the use of the possessive noun, and the verb used as an adjective is somewhat puzzling. Here is another sentence on the same page: While I was in America." The literal translation of the corresponding Japanese sentence is, "Me as-for America in dwell while." Here is another, from page 246: "May I show it to you?" The literal translation reads: "Honorable eyes in putting even, good." The Japanese, being naturally a very courteous people, use the honorifics and the polite form of the verb continually, as "O me," honorable eyes; "O cha," the honorable tea; "O yu," the honorable hot water, etc.

Golden Rule.

Two men became engaged in a fight in the street. Instantly their hats went off and rolled in the dust. One of the men was entirely bald, and the other had a thick head of hair. The bald man seized the other by the hair, and began to drag him about.

"Stop him!" cried a bystander.

"Why should you stop him?" asked another. "He's only practicing the golden rule."

"The golden rule? What do you mean?"

"Why, he's doing to the other man what he wishes to goodness the other man might be able to do to him!"

FIFTY THIRD CONGRESS.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE SPECIAL SESSION OF CONGRESS.

Condensed Record of the Business Being Transacted by our National Law-makers—Routine Report Day by Day.

Washington, Aug. 28.—Mr. Vest (Dem. Mo.) sent to the clerk's desk and had read a communication from the director of the mint, sent in response to an inquiry to give statistics as to the quantity of silver bullion purchased since 1878, the date of the Bland-Allison act, its cost, the amount coined, etc. Mr. Vest summed up the figures in order to show that if all the silver dollars were coined at the ratio proposed in his bill (20 to 1) there would be still a profit to the treasury on the whole silver transactions in 1878 of $15,207,903. He intimated pretty broadly that Mr. Carlisle, in his letter to Senator Voorhees on the same subject, had not treated the question fairly. Mr. Hill (Dem. N. Y.) then took the floor and spoke in favor of bimetallism. He declared that if the president turned his back upon bimetallism, the estblished policy of the country, and upon the pledges of the Democratic party he (Mr. Hill) would not follow him, and the president would have to rely upon Republican senators to carry out his plan. He declared, however, that he would vote for the pending bill unawed by power and uncorrupted by federal patronage. The speech caused a decided sensation. At the conclusion of Senator Hill's speech he was heartily congratulated by many senators. Senator Stewart of Nevada followed with a free silver speech.

The five-minute debate on the silver bill began in the house at 10 o'clock this morning. Mr. Pendleton (Dem. Tex.) and Mr. Bowers (Rep. Cal.) were in favor of free coinage, and Mr. Dockery (Dem. Mo.) spoke in favor of bimetallism. Mr. Marsh (Rep. Ill.) opposed the Wilson bill and favored the free coinage of silver. Mr. Compton (Dem. Md.) spoke for unconditional repeal, and Mr. Monroe (Dem. Miss.) against the repeal. Mr. Moon (Rep. Mich.) spoke for bimetallism, and Mr. Cobb (Dem. Ala.) opposed unconditional repeal. Mr. Burrows (Rep. Mich.) advocated repeal and was opposed to free coinage. Mr. Durburrow (Dem. Ill.) was in favor of repeal and urged upon his colleagues the necessity of restoring confidence among the people. Mr. Springer (Dem. Ill.) favored the unconditional repeal of the purchasing clause of the Sherman law. Mr. Sickles (Dem. N. Y.) spoke for unconditional repeal.

Washington, Aug. 29.—The house has passed the Wilson repeal bill—240 to 109—after debating the various amendments for free coinage at an increased ratio. The roll was first called upon the amendment to the Wilson bill providing for the free coinage of silver at the ration of 16 to 1. It resulted: Ayes, 123; nays, 225. Messrs. Shell and Graham were paired, the former in favor of free coinage.

The 17 to 1 amendment was defeated—100 to 210. Besides the loss of Populist votes, the members of the party withholding their votes, there were several negative votes from those who voted in favor of a ratio of 16 to 1.

The 18 to 1 free coinage amendment was rejected—102 to 239.

The 19 to 1 amendment was rejected—105 to 237.

The 20 to 1 amendment was likewise rejected—110 to 222.

The amendment to re-enact the Bland-Allison act was defeated—136 to 213.

All amendments being rejected, the repeal bill was read a third time and ordered engrossed, and the house voted on its final passage. The Wilson repeal bill passed—240 to 190.

Boen (Pop. Minn.), Lucas (Rep. S. D.), Pickler (Rep. S. D.) voted for free silver. Baldwin (Dem. Minn.) voted for 17 to 1, but against other propositions, and finally in favor of repeal.

In the senate the Lee Mantle case came up. The first vote was on laying on the table the motion to reconsider the vote of last week declaring Mantle not entitled to the seat. The motion to lay on the table was agreed to—31 to 28. This finally defeats Mantle. The parliamentary rule required the final vote in the Lee Mantle case to be taken on the original resolution as amended, and it was agreed to—32 to 29. The vote on the right of J. B. Allen of Washington, under like circumstances, was precisely the same—32 to 29. The result of the vote is that those senators are declared not entitled to their seats. The house bill to repeal the Sherman act was reported to the senate at 3:50 and was referred to the finance committee—Mr. Voorhees stating that there would be a meeting of that committee to-day, and that there would be prompt action on the bill in connection with the measure already reported from the finance committee.

Washington, Aug. 30.—The senate committee on finance decided to report back to the senate the Wilson repeal bill, with the recommendation that the Voorhees bill, already on the senate calendar, be substituted for it. The committee also resolved to set aside the national bank circulation bill which is now unfinished business in the senate, in favor of the Voorhees bill, and to press the latter measure as rapidly as the temper of the senate will permit. The difference between the house bill and the Voorhees bill is found in the attachment to the latter of a paragraph declaring that it is the policy of the United States to use both gold and silver as money metals, and to preserve parity. Chairman Voorhees reported the Voorhees bill to the senate as a substitute for the house bill at 12:15 p. m., Mr. Teller (Rep. Colo.) objected to immediate consideration of the repeal bill and it went over until to-day. Mr. Gorman (Dem. Md.) addressed the senate in advocacy of the unconditional repeal of the Sherman act. After a little routine business in the house Mr. Catchings (Dem. Miss.) called up the report of the committee on rules, reporting the rules to govern the house of the Fifty-third congress which the house proceeded to consider under general debate, but without action the house adjourned.

Washington, Aug. 31.—Mr. Sherman (Rep. Ohio) held the close attention of the senate and of a large audience in the galleries for over two hours as he set forth in terse and vigorous language—very rapidly delivered—the reasons why he supported the bill to repeal the purchasing clause of the act of July, 1890, and why it should be passed with as little delay as possible. Incidentally he recommended giving authority to the president or to the secretary of the treasury to issue bonds, bearing not over 4 per cent interest in order to procure gold with which to maintain a sufficient reserve; and he commented upon the fact that while he had proposed such a measure at the last session, the opposition to it came from the Democratic senators, although it was to their own administration that the power was to be confided. He also alluded to the remarkable attitude of Democratic senators in opposing the repeal of the act of July, 1890, although they had voted against it and still denounced it; whilst the Republicans, by whose votes exclusive that law was passed, were now anxious to vote for its repeal. He was followed by Mr. Teller (Rep. Colo).

The session of the house was devoid of interest. The proposed code of rules was debated pro and con, both under the hour rule and the five-minute rule, but little attention was paid to the speeches. Without disposing of the rules the house adjourned.

Washington, Sept. 2.—After the reading of the journal in the house Mr. Weadock (Dem. Mich.) offered a resolution postponing until Sept. 15 the delivery of eulogies upon the late J. Logan Chipman of Michigan. The resolution was adopted. The consideration of the rules was then resumed. The Boatner amendment providing for cloture was rejected—96 to 131. After some twenty minutes spent in the ordinary routine morning business of the senate (none of which was of public importance) the house bill to repeal part of the Sherman act was taken up and Mr. Vance (Dem. N. C.), one of the minority members of the finance committee, addressed the senate in opposition to the bill. The day was devoted to discussion.

MUST GIVE BONDS.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 2.—The state board of railroad commissioners is in session here. The object of the meeting is to make the elevators give bonds, as required by a law passed two years ago. Last year all the companies did not do this. Each elevator company is required to give bonds for $5,000 for one elevator and $1,000 for each additional one. No trouble is anticipated from the large companies doing business in the state, but the private elevator owners seem disposed to register a substantial kick. Other important matters may result in another meeting being held here next week.

RETURN TO WASHINGTON.

Washington, Sept. 2.—President Cleveland, accompanied by Mrs. Cleveland, their daughter Ruth, nurse and maid, arrived in Washington yesterday. Mr. Thurber was asked as to the general health of the party, and he replied that everybody was feeling first rate and the sojourn at Gray Gables had been beneficial to all. Mr. Cleveland, in particular, was in excellent spirits, his eye was bright and complexion clear, and he looked vigorous and strong.

Indianapolis, Sept. 4.—In accordance with secret orders issued by Gov. Matthews several companies of state militia went to Roby, Ind., last night to remain there to prevent the fight at the Columbian Athletic club billed for to-night. It is the governor's plan to begin quo warranto proceedings to set aside the charter of the Columbian association on the grounds that it has violated the law and ask that a receiver be appointed. A temporary receiver is to be put in charge and the state troops will go to Roby to be present at his intallation. He will not permit the use of the buildings and grounds for the prize fight to-night and the troops will be on hand to sustain him.

The girl fled and attempted to commit suicide by throwing herself in front of a moving cable train. She was not badly hurt. The officer arrested her and took her to the hold-over. There the girl determined to end her life. She swallowed a quantity of pins, thrust a long hat pin through her throat and hanged herself from a bar on the door of her cell. She was cut down before life was extinct, but died later.

Reader, when you are preparing to come to town to do some trading, just pick up your home paper, glance at the advertising columns and see who wants your trade. We guarantee that if you trade with those who recognize the local papers as an incentive to their business they will save you money. The man who advertises certainly has inducements to offer you or he wouldn't ask you to call and see him before buying. —Crookston Times.

The list of fatalities and property loss from the great hurricane which visited the Atlantic coast on Monday is hourly growing and is something appalling the list of dead reaching the hundreds, and the destruction of property amounts to several millions. Many of the scores of small sailing vessels which were wrecked might have been saved if the warnings of the weather bureau, published as early as Sunday morning, that such a storm was coming, had been heeded.—Ex.

When the money comes out of the old stocking and other hiding places; as it will there will be some surprise to find how much idle capital there is in this country. With business controlled, as it has been, with obligations discharged in many cases where the debt would have been continued, the surplus will become apparent. A good many men, it is said, have learned a lesson by which they will profit for a time at least. It is generally easier to borrow money than pay it. The exception has presented itself in the past four or five months.—Trade Journal.

The London Times in the course of a long leader on the dismal agricultural prospects of Great Britain, says that foreign competition depresses the price of cattle and corn. The imports of animals and meat, it says, will swamp the markets this year. Great Britain will be more than ever dependent on foreign supplies, and will require at least 28,000,000 quarters of wheat from abroad. France, it adds, must import twice as much as she usually does. As to Germany, that country has already begun to draw on the American markets for supplies. When nations thus bid against each other there is a fair chance that prices will advance,

There never was a law on our statute books that has been treated with more contempt than the present game law. No one has made any pretense of obeying it, at least so far as it governs the shooting of chickens, and for the past two weeks or more nearly all of our sportsmen have been openly violating the law. The reason for this is that September 1st is too late for good shooting The birds are wild and the covies are broken and the birds scattered. When the open season commenced on Aug. 15th the law was faithfully complied with, and if that date was again adopted there whould be very little, if any, game killed before the season opened.—Crookston Times.

Winston Harrington & Co. wholesale grocers of Minneapolis have sent out a circular to their customers asking them to urge their trade to part with their wheat only for cash or demand checks issued by firms of unquestionable responsibility and to forward such checks for collection so they may get money in hand promptly and under no circumstances to accept time paper for good wheat," We think that this is an unnecessary warning, for the farmers in this country are not going to part with wheat for anything but cash, unless it be to some local institution such as the Milling Association where they know the parties to whom they are selling.—Crookston Times,

Whatever or whoever is responsible for the present monetary stringency it seems to us the present administration could have prevented it or cut it short, or at least attempted to do something But it has done absolutely nothing except recommending repeal of the Sherman law. What about the "pig silver" in the treasury vaults? Certainly it will never be called in for redemption of silver certificates so long as the secretary of the treasury insists upon redeening them in gold only. But granted most of this is not available for coinage, what about the fifty odd millions seigniorage which the government has made on its silver purchases? Would it not have been a welcome relief for the country if this amount had been coined and set afloat through the different channels which the government has of putting money in circulation. Silver dollars have been at a premium in the large money centers and our farmers would a little rather take them than due bills for their wheat,—Norman County Herald.

The farmer, says the St. Paul Trade Journal, is made the butt of numberless newspaper jokes, caricatures and ridicule. He is called a jay, old Hayseed, Uncle Josh, and such like disparaging names: yet he is the very man that all the rest depend upon. Go where you may to discuss the business situation; to the bank presidents office; the broker's office; to the importer or manufacturer, the merchant speculator or politician, and with one accord they point to our abundant crops as the hope of business revival. And the man back of the crop is the farmer,

Where are the high wages which the American working men were to get under and by virtue of the McKinley tariff law. The Republicans promised high wages along with the high tariff. They gave us the high tariff but the high wages, where can they be found? in this connection we would also rise to enquire, how about the $1 per bushel for wheat which the Democrat party promised would be paid the farmers if Cleveland was elected president? Republican tariff has closed the doors of our manufacturing establishments and a Democratic administration has brought with it 47 cents a bushel for wheat and wait thirty days for your money at that, These good old Republican-Democratic times are what the people voted for last fall but we believe that they will not again allow themselves to be humbugged by the animent fake dual political party the Demo-Pubs. The lesson they are getting ought to cure them and we think it has already.—Ex.

TRUTH IS CHEAP.

And He Couldn't Help but Wonder What a Liar Would Do.

This is the story as he told it to me the other night, just outside the Fort street depot:

"If I were lazy or extravagant I shouldn't ask you or any other man for money. I'd be ashamed to. I'd say I deserved to starve and freeze. It is in nowise my fault that I am brought to this condition."

"It's circumstances, I suppose!"

"Exactly. I'd been working for a man in Indiana for nearly a year and had saved up $100. I started out to go into partnership with a man buying apples. We expected to make $500 in two months. A mule suddenly kicked the man, and he died—the man did. That's circumstances, ain't it?"

"Certainly."

"Then somebody robbed a store, and as they couldn't find anybody else to arrest they collared me. I wasn't within 15 miles of the store, but they are not at all particular in Indiana. They didn't claim I was guilty, but said they paid their constables for hustling and expected them to arrest everything lying around loose. Circumstances again, eh?"

"Looks like it."

"I wasn't content to stay in jail. It was too confining, and the sanitary arrangements were bad. I sent for a lawyer and gave him $80 to advise me. He advised me to give the other $20 to the jailer to let me out. See the hand of circumstances?"

"Yes."

"Came out dead broke and headed for Detroit, expecting to meet friends who would help me. On the way up a tramp held me up for an exchange of clothes, and I got here to find my friends gone to Europe for a five years' tour. More circumstances, see?"

"Plenty of it. Here's a nickel."

He took it in a gingerly way, felt of it, held it up to the light on the tip of his finger and said:

"If that's all you pay for 10 feet of solid old truth in this town, what on earth would a liar do to get a bed and a bowl of soup?"—Detroit Free Press.

What He Was.

It is a good thing for a clergyman to have a healthy liking for out of door exercise, and excellent divines have been none the less respected for having taken part in certain athletic sports.

But it is possible that a clergyman whose obituary notice appeared recently in the English journals carried athletics to a greater extent than is usual even in that country. The obituary notice begins as follows:

"Rev. John Suxtan, vicar of Bondleigh, died at Bondleigh yesterday. He was renowned as an angler; he was an excellent shot and a perfect horseman, being a well known member of the Eggesford hunt. He was also formerly well known and respected in cricketing circles."

And then the sacerdotal part of this clergyman's career is related in the following words:

"He had been vicar of Bondleigh 40 years."—Youth's Companion.

Fable—The Old Man and the Lover.

Once upon a time a Lover came and called upon his Girl. He had no thought of evil. Suddenly an Old Man burst upon the scene, and securing a neck hold on the Lover threw him into the street.

"Papa," sobbed the Girl, "is your heart still hard?"

"You bet your life!" shouted the Old Man. "This talk about my having fatty degeneration is all bosh."

This fable teaches that appearances are oftentimes deceptive.—Truth.

No Desire to Corrupt Him.

Old Tightpurse—Mr. Timmings, is it true that you remarked in a recent meeting of the Young Men's Psychic society that "Money is a curse and the root of all evil?"

Mr. Timmings (his employee)—Yes, sir.

Old Tightpurse—That being the case, Mr. Timmings, and your views on the subject being so sincere, I have no desire to pervert your noble nature by forcing you to take the raise of salary I had intended giving you. Good morning.—Chicago Record.

Just the Same.

A fly had fallen into the ink well of a certain author who writes a very bad and very inky hand. The writer's little boy rescued the unhappy insect and dropped him on a piece of paper. After watching him intently for awhile, he called to his mother and requested her to come to him for a minute.

"Here's a ejerented fly, mamma," he said. "He writes just like papa."—Harper's Bazar.

"I'm helping your niece paint, sir."

Both the Same.

Men, sensible in other respects, have a weakness for titles. One of the most intelligent men of letters I ever knew confessed to me that "he never felt so comfortable as when he had his legs under the mahogany of a person of quality." The man, however, who is said to have possessed this weakness in its most excessive degree was Samuel Warren, the author of "Ten Thousand a Year."

His desire to be supposed to be always on the most familiar terms with people of eminence was the more extraordinary since his own position in the world of letters made him a welcome guest with them. One day a brother barrister, who knew this peculiarity of his, called at his chambers and in the course of conversation Warren could not help remarking that he was invited to dine with the lord chancellor that evening.

"That's capital," said his friend, "for so am I. So we shall meet again."

Warren looked a little put out.

"But I am sorry to say I am not able to go," he said.

"Really I am sorry for that, and so will be the chancellor. I'll tell him how sorry you are."

After a little more talk the visitor rose to go.

"Don't trouble," said Warren, "to say anything about me to his lordship tonight."

"It will be no trouble. I shall only tell him how sorry you are. Why not?"

"Well, the fact is," said Warren, with a flush, "I was not invited."

"No more," replied the other, with a grin, "was I."—Independent.

What He Did.

One warm afternoon recently we were wheeling along the western outskirts of the city. Overheated and fatigued, we steered our course toward a large common in which were some shady trees which promised a cool resting place. On riding up we were surprised to see a middle aged and rather portly gentleman running furiously across the common in pursuit of an urchin who was making the pace. The gentleman's wheel lay by the roadside in a position which evidenced sudden and complete desertion, and a few yards away was a valise. The boy escaped and was successful in hiding himself securely in an old building.

The baffled pursuer returned to his property by the wayside, as always happens in such cases, evidently in a much disturbed frame of mind, gathered himself together generally and rode off. As soon as he was at a safe distance the boy came forth, his dirty face spread into an elaborate grin, and rejoined his companions. We asked him for particulars of the affair. What had he done to the gentleman?

"Oh, nuthin," he said indignantly as he caught his breath. "I jest 'soaked him' one on de car wid a hunk of watermelon."—Toronto Saturday Night.

The Reflections of a Mirror.

I know my owner loves me well,
Or why such time should she spend o'er me?
I seem to have for her a spell
That makes her sit for hours before me!

She smiles upon me day by day,
While silently I do my duty,
And in her generous hearted way
She gives me all her wealth of beauty.

She gives me dimple, brow and cheeks,
And, though the most demure of misses,
She says, "I love you," when she speaks,
And from her lips she throws me kisses.

She's constant to me. Yet I pine—
I'm not successful as a wooer.
The love she gives me is not mine:
